YANKEES MIGHT BE SKINNED IN
PROPOSED DEAL

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal. Feb. 3.—has come into prominence thru the introduction in Congress of a bill looking to the purchase of that unique peninsula.

"Baja" California, rejected by the United States after the War with Mexico as "the tail-end of an earthquake," though recognized as rich in natural resources is least known, according to the few who have made a scientific study of the peninsula, of any area of similar size in the western hemisphere.

Lower California, romantically styled "The Mother of California," has figured in modern history for 400 years. It was in 1527 that the Spanish captain-general, Fernando Cortez, sent one of Balboa's veterans, Alvera de Saavedra from Tehuantepec, on the west coast of Mexico, with instructions to try to find a strait supposed at that time to form a link in a route from Mexico, or New Spain as it was then known, to the newly discovered Spice Islands, known to later generations as the Philippines.

From Cortez come down to the present there have passed in review thru the pages of Lower California's history Spanish conquerors, Jesuits, Dominicans and Franciscans, and plunderers from many lands; United States troops during the War with Mexico filibusters intent on settling up an independent government, supremacy in Mexico's national and lastly the contending factions for administration since the overthrow of Porfirio Diaz as President.

It was Diaz who bestowed on Lower California, a title of Pobre Baja California, descriptive of her condition in recent years and which translated is "Poor Lower California."

Diaz's description fits the country just as well as to its topographical aspect, and in some other respects, for it is a jagged peninsula, 760 miles long, varying in width from 30 to 150 miles, and traversed thruout its length by an irregular range of barren mountains of volcanic origin, breaking off abruptly on the gulf side and rambling off in a series of low hills to the Pacific Coast. It has been described by its most recent explorer as "A land great in its past and lean in its present. A land where the rattlesnake and the sidewinder, the tarantula and the scorpion multiply, and where sickness is unknown and fivescore years no uncommon span of life. A land of strange contradictions."

While a territorial state of Mexico, it nowhere touches other Mexican soil, being separated from the mainland by the waters of the Colorado river and the Gulf of California. In 1910 the population of the entire peninsula was given at 52,244. There is but one railroad in the country, aside from "wheezy" mine transways, and that one from Mexicali to Yuma, but 63 miles in length. The "caminos" or roads, of the mission days have fallen into wretched state and in many places have been practically obliterated.

The peninsula is rich in mineral wealth, at least one of its silver mines in the southern district, having been operated since 1748, gold, silver, iron, coal, lead, gypsum and salt are found, valuable marble for building is everywhere abundant. Mining experts agree that the mineral resources have hardly been scratched.

Cactus and mesquits have given place in valleys where irrigation has been possible to the cultivation of deciduous fruits, figs, dates, cereals, and vegetables. Rainfall is scanty and insufficient to support vegetation. Tobacco, cotton, grapes, sugar cane and native melons are grown. Horses, cattle and sheep in limited numbers are found in the most fertile valleys.

The Booming of Cannon Has Ceased "Over There"
And—It's Time to Boost Business Over Here

The war is over, and we've won. Lightless nights have been done away with by the National Fuel Administration. The purpose of lightless nights was not alone to save coal, but the Government felt that the darkening of Electric Signs offered the best means of quickly and visibly bringing home to the people the fact that the nation was actually at war. It is fitting, therefore, that darkness, gloom, depression and pessimism be abolished in favor of good cheer, bright lights, more business and optimism. The Electric Sign is the harbinger of good cheer, healthy business and of general prosperity. Let's get things going full speed ahead on a solid, substantial peace basis. Burn your Electric Sign. Give our boys a glad welcome upon their return home.
