MALHEUR LAKE RESERVE AND
THE LINK RIVER JOB

There is pending in the Oregon legislature a bill—House Bill 376—which provides for the ceding to the federal government jurisdiction of Malheur lake. The specific reason for this proposal is the fact that it is one of the bird reserves created sometime ago by the federal government. Not satisfied with the grip they already have, the federal officials are seeking to get a tighter hold on it, and to accomplish this purpose are going to the Oregon legislature to secure a release of all interests this state may have. If the legislature grants this request, every member ought to be hanged. Oregon should cede nothing to the federal government. Instead of ceding anything, it should go after that which it has already released and get it back. It should start a movement that would drive from the confines of the state every federal official that is here by reason of the various reserves that have already been created and which are drawing from this state millions of dollars annually that should remain in Oregon and be used in the development of its resources.

We have here in Klamath County the result of this ceding business. When the Reclamation Service came in here, it, by fraudulent representations, induced the farmers to sign up contracts for irrigation; it got them to induce the legislature to cede the rights of the state in the Upper lake. What are the results today? We find this same service trying to steal from the farmers and turn over to a private corporation the greatest asset they have—the power. We find them trying to put thru a contract that will if effective, flood thousands of acres of land instead of reclaiming it. We have found and will find the government arbitrary, autocratic, disregarding of the rights and interests of everyone and everything, where they conflict with the opinions, ideas, rules and regulations of the petty officers of the government. They will cook up, frame and put through every conceivable scheme that will aid in the consummation of their plans and present them to their superiors in a favorable light and in this way place the state in an unfavorable position before the higher officials of the government.

The day is passed when Oregon should let the government get any tighter grip than it already has on the vital interest of the state. If this bill goes through, it will later be found that rights have been lost to the state that will be as important and as necessary to the interests of the people of Malheur county as are the rights lost to the people of this county in the Upper lake. Kill that bill. Kill every measure that will be presented to the legislature that will cede any privilege to the federal government. Let us make a fight for state rights, that we may once more breathe the air of free men, unhindered by the restrictions of carpet-bagging federal office holders, whose one thought has ever been, not the rights, interests and welfare of the people of the west, but the holding tighter to their jobs, that they may continue to eke out an easy living no matter what the cost may be to the citizens who have made this great empire west of the rockies.

THE LEGISLATURE AND THE PORTLAND JOURNAL

Once there was a bootlegger, so the story goes, who was trying to sell a Swede some booze. He had Old Crow, a name that still holds reminiscent memory, and squirrel whiskey, stronger than dynamite, but cheaper in price. The Swede, being thrifty, considered and said: "I guess I take the squirrel kind; I don't want youm around a little. I don't want to fly."

They had both brands at the Marston hotel Thursday night. It made the boys "youm around" until the patrons of the historic inn turned and tossed and "boiled" to the management. It made them forget that the senate and house had adjourned, and they indulged in loud and unexpurgated orations, until the filtering light of dawn had begun to kiss the eastern faces of shivering mountains. It left in its wake wreckage and headaches and bodily confusions here and there.

The above is from the columns of the Portland Journal—that boisterous sheet that is a disgrace to the profession of journalism. The owner of this publication has started out to run the Oregon legislature, and evidently finding that he cannot force his will upon it, is going to cast a shadow of suspicion on every member. We mistake the caliber of the men if they will permit such attacks as the above to cause them to waver from the path of right and justice, and take up the weapons of destruction the Journal is trying to force into their hands. The people of Oregon are not going to believe that it is represented by a gathering of carousing blackguards, and we are quite certain that their belief will be strengthened by the determined rejection of the Journal's program of radicalism. Oregon has had all it wants of its policies, and it is the apparent determination of the legislature to listen to the voice of the people, rather than to demands of Jackson, that has called forth this bitter attack.

Thurston Hall who creates the part of Robert Underwood in the latest Paramount Picture starring Dorothy Dalton, "The Mating of Marcella," was quite famous as a leading man on the stage throughout the country before he came into the pictures. His work in support of Dorothy Dalton in recent Paramount Pictures has brought him a great deal of deserved praise. Miss Dalton's latest picture was produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and it will be shown at the Star Theatre tonight, with every accessory necessary to insure an artistic presentation. Also Ben Turpin, that homely comedian in "Two Tough Tenderfeet."

Catherine Calvert, who is exploited as "The Lady Beautiful of the Screen," heads a cast of unusual excellence in "Out of the Night," which will be shown on the screen at the Liberty Theater tonight only. The part opposite Miss Calvert's is taken by Herbert Rawlinson, one of the most popular young screen actors of the day. Among his successes are "Smashing Through" and "Brace Up." Following his engagement with the Frank A. Reaney Pictures Corporation, which produced the picture, he became leading man for Mabel Normand.

Among others in the cast are Harry C. Meyers, for five years with Lubin; Emmett King, formerly of the Famous Players-Lasky; Frederick Esmelton, who has taken important parts with Madame Petrova, and Ida Darling, who had one of the principal roles in the George M. Cohan production, "Broadway Jones," and is known as one of the best character women in the "movies."
