

ECONOMIC WAR NOW WAGED BY ENGLISH WOMEN

LONDON—Correspondence of the Associated Press—An economic battle is being waged over the 1,500,000 unemployed women of the country who earned good wages chiefly as munitions workers during the war. Some English newspapers and commentators are asking if a sex war is one of the sinister possibilities of the future. They point out that the situation is more dangerous than when the suffragettes were wont to smash windows and terrorize the London police, because the women did not then know the full measure of their power.

Since the armistice was signed it has become more and more apparent that these 1,500,000 women workers would have to return to private life so as to give opportunity of employment for returning soldiers. But they have not accepted the situation with good grace, and have answered the challenge of the economic condition by strong organizations, whose avowed intention is to safeguard the position of women in industry.

The most important of these is Lady Rhodda's newly inaugurated Women's Industrial League, which has opened offices in London and sent organizers into all parts of the country. Lady Rhodda's plans are viewed with suspicion and some measure of distrust by professional women labor leaders.

Dr. Marion Phillips, chief woman officer of the labor party, asserts that the agitation conducted by Lady Rhodda's league is calculated to lead to bitterness and sex strife between men and women workers.

No More Leather

At the close of the war, European manufacturers instructed their agents in this country to buy them a supply of leather, and they did. American manufacturers, whose stocks were at bedrock, had to go into the market and bid against them, with the result that the price of leather is higher now than ever before in our history. And, what is worse, there is no more leather on the market. That is why shoes are going to be higher this year than ever before.

I have just received a shipment of shoes I bought last August—that tells a story in itself. I am not going to increase the price of these shoes with the market. Therefore, you save from 15 to 20 per cent. I am going to do the same thing with all the shoes in my store. But when I replace my stock prices will be higher.

Whether you need shoes now or later, this is the time to buy, for they are going to be higher. You know, I guarantee every pair of shoes I sell. You can get no better, and this will be your last chance to buy at present prices.
