MY OWN KLAMATH

Klamath, I love your dull gray sage. Your meadows and fields of grain; Just to gallop away At the break of day Across your free, level plain.

Where sunshine dimples the shadows On low-lying juniper hills, And cloudland hues In ethereal blues Are mirrored in your rills.

The wonders within your boundaries Prove that you are Nature's best; The bright sunbeams Dance with sapphire gleams, In a cup in the mountain's crest.

Old forts that bring memories of battle Will soon be but memories indeed; For meadow grass lands, With their sleek roving bands Are the white and the red man's creed.

To pine timbered mountains come hither— To lakes with blue hearts you'll adore.

To rich, fertile lands That pour wealth in your hands Klamath Falls opens the door. —Observant.

There are here and there sounds, of course, which remind us that there are no war-profits in arbitration.—Detroit News.

Nursery Rhymes and Higher Criticism

"Yes, sir," said the Sage of the Village, seating himself on the cracker barrel near the stove and regarding benignly the little group of farmers who were gathered in the store out of the heavy snowstorm which raged outside. "I have discovered that Mother Goose rhymes, so familiar in our homes, have a deep, underlying meaning, a practical message to humanity hitherto unsuspected. I mean to write to the newspapers about it."

"Ain't you got nothin' better to do than to read nursery rhymes, Silas," asked a grizzled listener, contemptuously.

"I've been reading them to my children," the Sage replied, "and I guess it is time well spent when it is devoted to your children."

"Right you are," said the village cobbler heartily. "What's this 'ere you've found in Mother Goose, Silas?" "Those rhymes sound rather silly to grown-ups," said Silas, pleased to see that he had an interested audience, "until you've discovered their hidden meaning. They all teach the same lesson. 'Let me illustrate,' as the parson says. 'Take 'Mother Hubbard,' for instance:

"Old Mother Hubbard, she went to the cupboard,

To get her poor dog a bone; But when she got there, the cupboard was bare.

And so the poor dog had none."

"Why was the cupboard bare? Because she was a poor widow who hadn't any money to keep it filled. Why was she poor? Because her husband hadn't carried any life insurance policy in some good company like The Mutual Life of New York, his widow could have found plenty of bones for her dog and food for herself."

"Same with 'The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe.' If her husband had carried life insurance, she would have lived in a nice little house of her own. Let us consider the 'Song of Sixpence' in the light of modern, scientific criticism, and see what it means:

"Sing a Song of sixpence,"

"That means the small sum of money you pay as a premium on your policy."

"A pocket full of rye,"

"Or, in other words, a nice big policy in your pocket."

"Four and twenty blackbirds baked in a pie";

"That means the number of annual payments arranged for in the policy, only nowadays they have only ten, fifteen or twenty of them in limited-payment policies."

"When the pie was opened,"

"Or when the policy matured."

"The birds began to sing,"

"Or, the 'money talked'."

"Wasn't that a dainty dish to set before the king?"

"Or, wasn't that a nice thing—the insurance—for the family to get?"

"How about 'Little Jack Horner,' Silas?" asked the store-keeper, leaning over the counter.

"Well," said Silas, "you and I would eat our Christmas pie with a good deal of pleasure if we had put in our thumb and pulled out our savings in an insurance company and pulled out a policy. Wouldn't we be inclined to say, 'What a good boy am I?'"

"Yes, I guess we would," admitted the store-keeper, laughing.

"Then," continued the Sage, "there is the rhyme about

"Jack, be nimble; Jack, be quick; Jack jump over the candlestick."

"It sounds silly enough until you study it. What it really means is, you should hurry up and take out an insurance policy, for you never can tell when the candle of life is going out. I tell you, my friends, and Silas rose and, buttoned up his overcoat, "those 'Mother Goose' rhymes would never have lasted all these years if they hadn't some meaning to them, and if any of you can find any better meanings to them than the ones I gave, I would like to hear them."

But nobody had a word to say.

MUSIC VERSUS NERVES

It is said that the American people are of a high strung and nervous disposition.

Music is known to have a quieting effect, and the exquisite tones of a beautiful Knabe or Lyon & Healy piano are especially soothing to the tired housewife or business man.

Why not let us prove this by dropping into our store some day when you are particularly fagged, and hear one of the above instruments.
