

At the Theaters

Among the many thrilling scenes that make "Playing the Game," the new Paramount photoplay featuring Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, a notable picture is a fight in which Billy Elmer, a fighter in real life, as well as in pictures, takes a prominent part. Billy is a scrapper and has plenty of chances to scrap in this picture. As the valiant Larry Prentiss, the role assumed by Mr. Ray, he provides excellent support to the star. Mr. Ray's characterization in this picture stamps him as the inevitable portrayer of American youth, strong, brave and sturdy.

Mr. Ray's leading woman in this picture is Doris Lee, a young woman of charm and magnetism. "Playing the Game" will be shown at the Star Theatre tonight.

She heard a slight brushing noise at the window in horror of marauders, she grasped a revolver from the table and leveled it in the direction from which the noise had come.

"Come in," she called, "and throw up your hands."

A man entered the room, a tantalizing smile on his lips.

"Don't shoot," he said. "I'm a bold bad burglar, but I won't hurt you."

He was a thief, she knew, but there was something about his voice and his smile that made her hesitate to call the police. She dropped the revolver.

The man, quick as a flash, became master of the situation. Then, as if he would consent to leave, he made her promise to invite him to a reception which she was to attend.

Warner's turn came the next night, when he found himself face to face with a man who had stolen something he wanted, a man who had persuaded a girl to marry him against her best judgment, a man who—

There's a thrill in every scene of "Kiss or Kill," the smashing Universal Special Attraction in which Priscilla Dunn will appear as the star at the Liberty theatre tonight with Herbert Rawlinson in support.

A Standard Test for Gasoline

The third of a series of three statements

War needs made prominent the question of a standard test for gasoline. On July 31st, 1918, President Wilson ordered a committee appointed under the United States Fuel Administration to establish specifications and standards of test for gasoline supplied to the government. This committee consisted of the United States Fuel Administration and representatives of the War and Navy Departments, the United States Shipping Board, the Director General of Railroads, the Bureau of Mines, and the Bureau of Standards. Standards were adopted for aviation gasoline (export, fighting and domestic) and for general motor use on land and sea.

The Gravity Test Discarded

The Government's Committee on Standardization of Petroleum Specifications stated in its report: "It will be noted that there are no gravity limitations in the specifications for aviation gasoline, nor in the specifications for motor gasoline which are given later, for it has been found that gravity is of little or no value in determining the quality of gasoline." The standard is adopted by the United States Government as based on boiling points.

storage by evaporation would be great. There must be just enough low boiling points to vaporize freely and give easy starting. The higher boiling points are necessary for quick acceleration, high power and long mileage.

As combustion starts with the lowest boiling points and flashes on through the gas, the continuous chain of boiling points—from the low to the high—is necessary for instantaneous, full-powered combustion. Only a straight-distilled, all-refinery gasoline can have the continuous, uniform chain of boiling points.

Boiling Points the Real Test

Gasoline is known to the refiner as one member of the petroleum family. He distinguishes each member of the family, not by gravity, but by boiling points. Gravity is a fleeting standard of test, but boiling points are unchanging in their value and always determine the quality of the product. Knowing them the refiner can keep his product uniform and reliable.

What Is a Boiling Point?

A boiling point is the temperature at which a liquid will begin to boil or vaporize. In distilling a given quantity of gasoline the refiner ascertains at what point each 10 per cent will boil, until the entire quantity is evaporated or distilled. In this way he determines what is known as the initial boiling point, as well as all intervening boiling points in the chain, up to the maximum, high boiling point.

Boiling Points Tell the Story

Boiling points determine the vaporizing and combustible qualities of gasoline. They decide the action of the gas developed from gasoline. They are the only true measure of gasoline value.

An ideal gasoline has boiling points in a continuous, uniform chain. There must not be too many low boiling points, otherwise the loss in

The United States Government Standard Specifications for Gasoline

The United States Government standard specifications for gasoline are based on boiling points—not gravity. Drafted as they were by impartial Government experts, they are generally considered, in the light of conditions today, as the most practical standard for gasoline. They insure an efficient and satisfactory gasoline and at the same time have due regard for the best utilization of our petroleum resources, and the maintenance of reasonable prices to the consumer.

Red Crown Gasoline Conforms to United States Government Standard

All Red Crown gasoline now being supplied in the Pacific Coast States is refined to conform to the United States Government Standard specifications. It is straight-distilled, all-refinery gasoline having the full, uniform chain of boiling points necessary for full-powered, dependable gasoline. Low boiling points for easy starting, medium boiling points for quick, smooth acceleration, and high boiling points for power and mileage.
