At the Theaters

Princess Mona Darkfeather, the famous Indian photoplay star, will appear at the Star theatre tonight. Princess Darkfeather has appeared in more photoplays than any other actress in the profession, numbering over five hundred in her eight years experience on the screen. She has been identified as Star with the original Bison Co., also with Selig, Universal, Kalem and Mutual Companies besides producing independently.

With a thrill in every foot of film, a smashing climax and a love story that is delightfully convincing, "The Border Wireless," the new William Hart picture, which was shown at the Star Theatre yesterday is one of the best in which that virile Western actor has ever appeared. It is an Artcraft photoplay and was directed by Mr. Hart himself, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. The story was written by Howard E. Morton and C. Gardner Sullivan did the general.

By linking Mr. Hart's Western type of characterization with a distinctly modern situation resultant from the war, involving a wireless plot on the border engineered by German spies, and bringing in a most exquisite little telegraph operator, the authors have succeeded in bringing the drama up to the minute without sacrificing any of that picturesqueness that every admirer of Mr. Hart demands.

Patrons of the Liberty theatre will welcome Dustin Farnum in his big United superfeature, "The Light of Western Stars," which will be shown here beginning Sunday afternoon. This famous stage and screen star will be seen as the wild, but lovable Gene Stewart, cowboy of the South Western border. With Dustin Farnum's virile, convincing talent and the most thrillingly fascinating of Zane Grey's masterly stories the picture teems with exciting interest. The plot deals with the adventures which arise out of Gene Stewart's wild wager that he would marry the first girl who blew into the little Western town. When he has carried out his wager further than he knew and the girl proves to be the sister of the rancher whose foreman Stewart is, things happen quick, and the audience swings between hope and fear right up to the final picture. In his staging of the production Chas. Swickard has caught the author's wonderful inspiration. The photography is magnificently beautiful in subject and in execution. Winifred Kingston is a fascinating leading woman and the support is excellent throughout.
