SCHOOL HELD QUARTER MILE BELOW GROUND

MOSCOW, Idaho, April 15.—A school room 1,400 feet under ground in the Morning mine at Mullan, Idaho, in which returned soldiers are being taught the art and practice of mining lead-zinc ore, is one of the latest educational innovations of the University of Idaho. This work, which has been inaugurated by the school of mines at the university, so far as is known, is the first attempt to apply to actual, underground mining work, the new system of vocational education provided for by the Smith-Hughes act, and the experiment is being watched with interest by miners and mine operators alike throughout the Western states.

The school room is far under ground, and it is devoid of blackboards, books and benches. Pupils and teacher alike are dressed in overalls and mining boots, and the school equipment consists of rock drills, driven by compressed air, or "machines", as they are generally termed in mining parlance, steel or drill bits for these machines, picks, shovels, timber, dynamite, caps and fuse, and all the proper paraphernalia of those who go down to the mine in skips.

The teacher is Lieutenant Frank H. Skeels, officer of the engineers of the U. S. army, recently released from service for this work. Before going into the army Lieutenant Skeels had been a mine manager and mine superintendent, to which position he had risen after spending all his life since boyhood in and about the mines of the Couer d'Alene district.

Admission to the school is obtained by application to the federal employment agent at Wallace, and preference is given to returned soldiers who are young enough and bright enough to be teachers.

The work in hand is what is known as drifting, that is, driving a horizontal gallery or working lengthwise of the vein. The pupils operate the rock drills in turn, learning the intricacies of the "drift round" studying the number of holes necessary to break out the predetermined section of rock, the angles at which they must be driven to make the greatest progress with the least amount of drilling and the smallest possible supply of dynamite. In addition, the placement of timber to support a weak wall or a "slabby" rock, and all the various kinks of the underground trade are taught, and taught by making the student do them in actual workmanlike fashion, to pass the scrutiny of a dogmatic mine foreman and a lynx-eyed safety engineer.

BIG LUMBER SUIT SETTLED AT BEND

BEND, Or., April 15.—The biggest suit, from a monetary standpoint, ever brought in the Deschutes county circuit court, was disposed of here Saturday, when Judge T. E. J. Duffy, on motion of attorneys for the plaintiff, granted a non-suit in the $48,000 damage action brought by C. F. Ward Spokane lumber buyer, against the McKinley Hampton Lumber company of this city, for alleged breach of contract.

The defense objected to the introduction of all testimony on the grounds that the contract, calling for the delivery of 10,000,000 feet of lumber in three years, the basis of the complaint, was one-sided, and failed to protect the seller. The plaintiff, the first witness in the case, had given but one answer to questions asked by his council, when the objection was entered, and the court's ruling given.

BIG SUM SPENT TO ADVERTISE THE NORTHWEST

PORTLAND, April 16.—Expenditure of $62,500 for display advertising telling of the attractions of the Pacific Northwest will be made by the Northwest Tourist association between now and the middle of June, according to plans adopted at a meeting of the publicity men of Seattle, Portland, Vancouver, B. C., and Victoria, B. C., at which Sidney B. Vincent, publicity director of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, was present.

Herbert Cuthbert of Seattle is executive secretary of the Northwest Tourist association and A. R. Davidson of Vancouver, W. A. McAdam of Victoria, W. D. Chandler of Seattle and Sidney Vincent of Portland were the city delegates who went over the copy plans for the year.

The plans, according to Mr. Vincent, are to place display advertising in prominent newspapers and periodicals all over the country. A similar campaign was determined on for Canada. The members of the association predicted that more than 100,000 tourists would visit the Pacific Northwest this summer.

Special arrangements are to be made for the printing of a number of small handbills which will be sent to a selected list of tourists in the East. Travel bureaus in the Eastern cities have agreed to co-operate in this campaign.
