

Members of Fighting Eleventh Engineers Who Have Not Lined Up With the "Drys"

Judging from the cheers which greeted the raising of a banner on which was the glaring inscription "We Want Beer," there are few "drys" among the returning members of the Eleventh Engineers. This photograph was taken while the men were awaiting to disembark from a transport at Hoboken. The Eleventh Engineers were the first A. E. F. forces to battle with the Germans. They were attacked while building a railroad, dropped their picks and shovels, picked up their rifles and charged the advancing enemy.

has centered on the price per ton to be fixed for the purposes of the transfer.

According to the Asahi, a Japanese newspaper, there has been much difference of opinion between the Americans and Japanese concerned in regard to the valuation of the vessels to be taken over by the proposed company. The American promoters are said to have advocated a price of $150 per ton, which is about the same as the price quoted on the open market in Japan, while the Japanese interests maintain that the value of the vessels built during the war should be put at approximately twice this figure.

Another factor which has entered into negotiations is the fact that a company under joint management with foreigners cannot hope to secure protection or subsidy from the Japanese government.

Japanese ship building yards have been hard hit since the armistice particularly in the matter of wooden vessels. Also there has been a great amount of idleness among wooden vessels already built, owing to what the owners consider the lowness of the charter rate, preferring to allow their ships to lie idle rather than to accept a figure which it is claimed nets them a loss. Many of these are 9,000 ton vessels.

According to the newspapers of Japan, indications point to an even greater depression in the shipbuilding industry of that country, with no early prospect of revival of activity. It is estimated that the vessels to be built this year will amount to about 700,000 tons, of which about 230,000 tons are to be supplied to the United States under last year's agreements for selling vessels in return for an American supply of shipbuilding materials, and 70,000 tons represent the vessels ordered by shipping companies. The remaining 400,000 tons are vessels built by shipyards on their own account.

AMERICANS AND JAPS PLANNING SHIP MERGER

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.—Pacific coast shipping circles are awaiting with interest the return of William H. Avery, adviser to the Asano interests and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, who is expected to arrive here tomorrow on the S. S. Korea Maru from the Orient. Mr. Avery has been in consultation concerning the great merger of Pacific shipping interests, which, of late, has occupied the attention of the public, and is expected to give some definite information as to the progress made. Negotiations looking toward the formation of a new $100,000,000 steamship company by powerful Japanese and American financial interests have been underway for some time, according to reports from authoritative sources. One of the ideas underlying the merger is to reduce the effect of the great decline in the value of tonnage that has occurred everywhere since the armistice by handing over to the combination the newly constructed steamers at a reduced price.
