At the Theaters

Edith Wharton's "The House of Mirth," one of the most wonderful plays ever produced, will be the attraction at the Liberty Theatre today, in which will be seen an all star cast of Broadway players, every one of whom is a star in his or her own right. The adaptation is the work of June Mathis and Albert Capellani, and the direction is by Mr. Capellani.

The story centers around a young society girl, Lily Bart, played by Katherine Harris Barrymore, who has been brought up in effete luxury, and then left penniless at the death of her parents. Living with a wealthy aunt, who will not tolerate her reckless extravagance she decides to marry her wealth and resolves to sell herself to the highest bidder, thereby throwing over the man she really loves. Her love for luxury and clothes is inordinate, and she finds herself heavily in debt. She turns to gambling with cards and in the stock market and puts herself deeply under obligation to an unscrupulous man, who altho already married, is in love with Lily.

She becomes involved in scandal and divorce and sinks lower and lower in the social scale. Thru the love of a good man, however, she is reclaimed and finds happiness such as she has never had before. The story is gripping and intense and such a revelation of social conditions of today that it will awaken many to the realization that the Orientals who sell their beautiful daughter to the highest bidders are not more immoral than many members of our own society.

The all-star cast contains such illustrious players as Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Christine Mayo, Lottie Briscoe, Edward Abeles, Pauline Welch, Maggie Western, Nellie Parker-Spaulding, W. D. Fichter, Sidney Bracey, Kempton Greene and Morgan Jones.

A very very few of the people might consider the amusements of the country as non-essentials, but the administration does not so regard it officially or personally.

Mr. McAdoo has repeatedly declared amusements very essential and again in a long letter under the date of August 30, 1918, addressed to the Billboard, the world's leading periodical he says: addressing the amusement profession.

"Your business is not looked upon as non-essential and there is no desire to eliminate you from the business and social life of the country. On the contrary the patriotic work you are doing and the large source of revenue to the Government thru the war tax that you represent is fully appreciated."

Indeed the country would soon become dormant, disheartened and exhausted by the monotony of recreation and temporary mental relief afforded by the amusements. In the center of this wonderful government machinery of the times, where almost miracles are being planned and directed, in the City of Washington, the amusement business is thriving as never before in its history. Practically every one of our high officials make a weekly visit to the Theatre—they are forced to do so or they would be overcome by sheer exhaustion.

People attending such a meritorious entertainment as that presented by the Harvey Greater Minstrels, a company of forty people, pay a small war tax on every ticket and thus help the Government besides receiving temporary relief from their cares and worries.

They will be at The Opera House Tuesday and Wednesday, June 10 and 11.

Constance Talmadge in "Up the Road With Sallie" is as vivacious, as amusing and as flippant as in "The Honeymoon," as beautiful as in "The Studio Girl," as dramatic as in "Scandal," and as lovable as in "The Shuttle"—and more charming than ever. At the Star tonight.

One Way They Made the Kaiser See Stars

Popularity and the erstwhile kaiser haven't been on speaking terms for several years. How some of the Yankees who went over to help the allies finish the job felt about him is shown in this photograph taken when the 302nd Engineers got back home recently. A artistically inclined member of the 302nd shows the kaiser seeing stars at every wallop they handed him.
