"In Search of Arcady"

This innocent and pretty heiress who detestd fortune hunting suitors, and this handsome young nobleman, fleeing from designing mamas, slept together the first night they met—quite conventionally as two Gypsies—under the canopy of stars, cooked breakfast together the next morning—all of which considerably shocked their friends the next time they met under more conventional circumstances.

KLAMATH ASKS FOR MORE FISH

STREAMS BECOMING DEPLETED AND NEED OF RESTOCKING BECOMING MORE URGENT

The Herald is in receipt of the communication published herewith. One of the chief reasons for the failure of this county to receive all of the recognition that the writer of this letter believes should be given, lies in the fact that there is no organization representative of the lovers of sport in Klamath. At one time there was a real live Rod and Gun club, and when it was in existence Klamath got what it went after. That organization should be revived. If it is, Klamath county will soon have its own hatchery, the violations of the game laws by the Lost river dam, the Copco dam, the purloining of fish eggs for the benefit of other sections of the state without giving Klamath credit therefor, would soon stop, and the grievance of this writer would be removed. Klamath county is filled with real lovers of sport and it is surprising that they have so long neglected to maintain an organization commensurate with the interests at stake. The letter in question follows:

Editor The Herald:
News that the enormous quantity of trout eggs that are now being taken from Diamond Lake are all being shipped to the Bonneville fish hatchery for distribution in other parts of the state has caused considerable comment among the lovers of piscitorial pleasures in Klamath Falls and the country about, and that comment is far from favorable. In fact, the lovers of the rod and fuzzy-wuzzy lures are considerably on the peck, and apparently have ample cause for grievance. They claim that Klamath county, furnishing millions of trout eggs each year to the state, is not receiving her just share, and that her streams and lakes are being robbed for the benefit of the state at large. They also claim, and with apparent justice for their claims, that in a few years Klamath's streams will be fished out, and one of the principal attractions to tourists from all over the world will be lost forever to Klamath. Spencer Creek is taken as one example of what is being done to Klamath county streams. Just a few years ago that stream was a paradise for the followers of Isaac Walton, and was fairly alive with trout from ten to fourteen inches in length. While the stream is now closed, and the residents of the county deprived of one of the finest outing spots ever found out of doors, the fact remains that a trout taken from that stream that measures six inches in length is a rarity indeed, the majority of them being mere fingerlings, and scarce at that.

Spencer Creek has suffered no more than some of the other streams. One of the sights at Spring Creek and in Williamson river a few years ago was the enormous schools of trout feeding all along the streams. At the present time it is almost impossible to discover more than a dozen or so in the course of an entire day.

Lost River, too, was once remarkable for its trout fishing, but since the installation of the diversion dam several years ago there has not been taken, at a high estimate, more than 100 trout between Olene and Bonanza.

Other streams are almost as bad. The residents of the Bly country claim that the forks of the Sprague river are almost "fished out," and one of their sources of food supply as well as a source of great pleasure and an attraction for visitors will soon be a thing of the past.

What can we do about it? Well, that's hard to say. We have got to do something, for it is against human nature to sit still and be robbed of a God-given benefit, such as the streams and lakes of Klamath formerly furnished the people.

Following are some of the opinions expressed by lovers of the sport when interviewed on the situation yesterday:

Barney Chambers—It's a damn shame. I was up to Spring Creek and Williamson River last week, and at places where I have always caught trout at this time of the year I never even got a strike—the fish are gone, I tell you.

Charles Roberts—I have fished the Klamath streams all my life, and must say that in the last few years the sport has fallen off to a very great extent. Nothing like it was when I was a boy, and nothing like it was just a few years ago.

Bob Sloan—Fishing fallen off? I should say it has! Spencer Creek used to be a dream; now it's a nightmare.

Fred Houston—You can still get 'em if you know just where to go and how to lift 'em out.

Francis Olds—You can still get 'em at Odell Lake, but you want to know how to swim.

Chas. Marple—I can still get a few, and always expect to, but it is a fact that there are not near so many trout as there were a few years ago.

Lee Bean—It's been a long time since I had to count 'em to be sure that I wasn't over the limit. There's no chance of that at this stage of the game.

Nate Otterbein—Oh, there's trout here still, but it is a fact that there are not nearly so many as a few years ago.

George Reese—I can notice a difference in the few years I have been fishing here. Hope it don't get worse.

Law Martin—It's just another phase of H. C. L. When you could get a good steak for 15 cents you could get plenty of fish. Now the steak is out of sight and the fish are nearly so.

Marv Howard—If you are going to get 'em you have got to get where nobody else goes. There are still a few of the favorite places, but they are getting scarce.

Jack Driscoll—Never caught a fish in my life, and my chance is getting slimmer each day.

Many others were interviewed, and the general opinion as expressed is that the trout fishing of Klamath county is decidedly on the wane, and that unless something was done at once the county would suffer in the loss of one of its greatest attractions.

Who Banks Your Money?

If you haven't an account here at the First National Bank—or any bank—that is no sign your money doesn't get here sooner or later. Suppose you spend it at the store. Well there's not one store in a hundred that does not have a bank account. Therefore back it comes. It wouldn't you rather it would be YOUR money than the other fellows? Of course. Then bank it here yourself!
