At the Theatres

The finest of the masterpieces were tersely and concisely written without waste of characters or of verbiage. The De Maupassant short stories were composed of only a few characters, yet each one had his or her part to play—and played them well and graphically.

"A Taste of Life" brings the foregoing to mind. This Bluebird feature which comes to the Temple theatre on tonight, with Edith Roberts in the featured role, has but five major characters, but each is a comedy facet that enhances to the greatest scintillancy the star. And each, too, is a comedy asset of "purest ray serene." Director Jack Dillon has woven the performers into his continuity with great skill.

The story has to do with a modern Eve, who tells, not for an apple, but for maraschino cherries. She cannot resist them, and one day, having lunch with a prospective client for her husband, whom she wishes to hold against his return, she imbibed too freely of cocktails—and cherries. She is taken to a roadhouse to sober up, but her companion, poor henpecked fellow, who is trying to give his wife the divorce he thinks she wants, is pursued, and complications continue to pursue him and Kitty Dillingham (Edith Roberts), until they turn the tables on their hunters and make them the hunted.

In "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," William Desmond's latest picture, the big good natured star has a role that is a delightful blend of comedy and drama. His genial personality is thoroughly at home in a character of this sort since it permits him to mingle melodramatic with richly humorous situations.

Mr. Desmond plays a big-hearted Texan who, after inheriting a mine from his uncle, starts out to run to earth a bandit who has been robbing the stage of ore belonging to his property. The cowboy falls in love with a girl who in reality is the bandit. Her father has been defrauded of his claim in the mine by Gallagher's uncle. So the Texan restores the mine to its rightful owner and informs him that he is about to catch the bandit and punish him according to Western code. Gallagher is surprised to learn that the bandit is the miner's daughter and the very girl who has captured his heart. So he goes to her rescue.

Here is a rare photograph. It shows the Pershing smile—a rarity, according to the pictures received in this country. The commander of the doughboys who helped to put the German army out of business is seen here congratulating one of the winners and presenting him with a medal after the big A. E. F. track and field meet held recently at Columbus Field, Paris. Some of America's famous college athletes competed.

The picture abounds with thrilling action, one scene being a corking fight between Gallagher and a Mexican. There is no doubt about the feature holding ones interest, so thoroughly in earnest are the players, and so picturesque are the several scenes. Mr. Desmond is supported by Agnes Vernon, who is an ideal selection for the girl-bandit. Frank Lanning gives a vivid performance as the Mexican. The story was written by William Parker and was produced under the direction of Jesse D. Hampton. "Bare-Fisted Gallagher" will play at the Liberty tonight.

The wonders of Noah's Ark are even exceeded in the forthcoming presentation in this city at the Liberty Theatre tomorrow. "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain." This motion picture of animal life is the most marvelous film ever seen, because it presents the strangest creatures known to science. Great huge beasts that weigh from twenty to thirty-seven tons, monsters who measure seventy-five to eighty feet in length, are projected on the screen before your very eyes. No circus or menagerie have ever had their likes, and yet that these animals existed is vouched for by every scientific body in the world. Never in the life of any man has anyone seen these living animals. How did Major Dawley photograph them? Where did he find them? You will ask these questions, and no one can answer. Where is the mysterious land these animals inhabit? That they existed four million or more years ago is conceded, but how is it possible for you to see them today? The Brontosaurus, the Dinosaur, the great Triceratops may mean little to you as you read this, but if you see the picture you will never forget it if you live to be a hundred years old. It is the marvel of the decade and has a hundred different angles of interest. The fight between two of these huge beasts will give you a thrill that you seldom get from pictures.

Tennessee Mountain Girl Who Became Bride of One Of the Great War Heroes

Mrs. Alvin C. York

There is the Tennessee mountain girl who has just become the bride of Sergeant Alvin C. York, hero of the Argonne drive, who accomplished the greatest individual feat of the war. This girl of seventeen, Miss Grace Williams, is very proud of her stalwart, unassuming husband, not only because he killed twenty Germans, captured 132 more and put thirty-six machine guns out of action, but because he did his duty, although he had been a conscientious objector until his commander convinced him he was fighting for a righteous cause.

HILO OFFERS PRIZE FOR LANDING OF PLANE

HILO, Hawaii, T. H., June 14—(By Mail.)—Stirred by the report that Thomas Ince, motion picture producer, had offered $50,000 as a prize for the first aviator to reach Australia from California, touching in Hawaii, L. Barron, local banker, is raising by subscriptions a fund of $5,000, which will be paid to aviators competing for the Ince prize if they land their seaplanes in Hilo harbor for supplies. More than half of the fund was subscribed in a few hours.

COLLEGE PROFESSOR CHASES A THEORY

HONOLULU, T. H., June 13. (By Mail.)—In search of a foundation for his theory that a great continent once existed in the Pacific ocean, that the Hawaiian islands were its northernmost part and that Hawaii's lofty and rugged mountains are the tombstones on an "Atlantic of the Pacific," Professor William A. Bryan of the College of Hawaii has departed for explorations of the Western South American coast and of the South Sea islands. He expects to be absent for several years, working under the auspices of the Carnegie Institute and the College of Hawaii. Professor Bryan's theory is based on researches which he has already made in Hawaii and on some of the South Sea islands and which have convinced him that once these islands were the highest peaks of a continent which later sank into the ocean.
