FIGHTING INDIAN IS TIRED OF WAR

LOS ANGELES, Calif., July 7.—Joe Mills, the richest Indian in the service of America in the world war, has had enough of fighting and favors a lasting peace. He saw 18 months' service including participation in the memorable engagement at Chateau Thierry where Mills stopped a German machine gun bullet. He still carries his arm in a sling as the result of the wound.

Mills is in Los Angeles to "rest up to get the memories of the European fighting out of my mind," as he put it. Mills said from earliest childhood he had heard the old men of his tribe—he is of the Osages—tell of the glories of the war and he thought soldiering would be a good adventure.

"So it may have been," said he, "when the old men of my tribe were young, but that was before the day of the machine gun and poisoned gas. The slaughter in France is horrible. I did my duty and I will do it again if Uncle Sam needs me, but until he does I am going to stay in the good old United States of America and look after Mrs. Mills, my eight year old son, and my property.

Though he mentions this property interest last, Mills is rated a millionaire. Most of his income is derived from oil bearing lands in Oklahoma, his home.

Mills served as a member of the field artillery.

Republican leaders are betting that Oscar Underwood of Alabama will win the Democratic nomination for the presidency. They are certain that he will be under Wood when the results are totaled in another year.
