HAS YARD AND A HALF OF FINGERNAILS

The aristocrat and wealthy in China show their social position by growing fingernails, for one cannot work and have long tapering nails. Reasoning thus, this man, Wong Lee, must be the wealthiest man in China—because he has the longest fingernails in the world. The longest is 31 1/2 inches; the next is 21 inches and the shortest six inches. The first two are protected by bamboo casings.

WAITERS STRIKE IN ROME FOR MORE TIPS

ROME, July 8. (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Restaurant waiters have been recently verted ancient Caesars in Rome for they have controlled both the public and the hotel and restaurant proprietors. Romans cannot eat outside the confines of their own home for there is now no place to eat. All restaurants are closed.

The quarrel is on the unending subject of tips. It has been the policy during some weeks to include the tip in the bill. At the end of each day, the waiters' share would amount to 20 percent of the gross receipts in some cases. The proprietors found that this procedure was not acceptable to the guests and asked the waiters to return to the former system of voluntary tipping. They refused.

The refusal culminated in a strike. Some hotels were forced to accede to the demands of the waiters and in these alone was anyone able to procure food. Because these hotels were the only ones in which people could be served the waiters clashed with the patrons. Italian officers accompanied by women were insulted while a unidentified British general just returned from the campaign in Palestine was subjected to a somewhat tortuous exhortation.

CALIFORNIA CLAIMS LAND

California legislature in 1905, when for the purpose of aiding the work of the United States reclamation service, the state authorized the lowering of the level of this and other specified lakes, and ceded to the nation "any lands uncovered by the lowering of the water." The state asserts that the lands in controversy were not uncovered by the lowering of the water, and therefore did not pass under the grant.

The ruling of the interior department came as a distinct surprise to McKisick and Surveyor General W. S. Kingsbury, who had understood that the point was fully conceded by the federal government, after the trial of the Churchill case in the Siskiyou court, wherein conditions for a long period of years were discussed by old residents of the lake region. A representative of the general land office was present during that trial.

Four sets of claimants are fighting for some of the area involved in this controversy. One set claims it as segregated swamp and overflow land, another as unsegregated swamp and overflow land, another classes it as sovereign land of the state, to be sold only to actual settlers, and the fourth set has proceeded under the theory that the land belongs to the United States. All of them, even the last specified contingent, will lose their alleged rights if the Vogelzang ruling holds. McKisick says, as the reclamation service regulations, rather than the general homestead laws, will apply. Claims patented before 1905 are not concerned.

Should it be necessary to bring suit in the federal court, he adds, it must be directed against the commissioner of the general land office, and for that reason the complaint must be filed in the court for the District of Columbia.

About 1,000 acres of the tules were patented before the 1905 act was passed, and therefore are not included in the disputed area. A larger tract is in litigation to decide whether the law in effect when the application was filed, in 1872.

or when the certificate was issued, must be without authority to recognize or entertain any claim on the law limited the claimant to 640 part of the state therefor under the acres, while in 1872 there was no swamp land act, or under any other limit, and Presley A. Harris filed on 5,120 acres. This, with the 1,000 acres of patented land, is now held by the Churchill company.

It is asserted by Vogelzang that between $200,000 and $300,000 have been expended from the federal reclamation fund in the Lower Klamath lake project, an experiment station being maintained for several years by the department of agriculture. A contract with the railroad company provided a trail to prevent the overflow from Klamath river to the lake basin.

In his opinion, the entire area, except that already disposed of in 1905, was ceded by the state to the nation, and "is now held subject to disposition only under the general reclamation laws, and this department is without authority to recognize or entertain any claim on the law limited the claimant to 640 part of the state therefor under the acres, while in 1872 there was no swamp land act, or under any other limit, and Presley A. Harris filed on 5,120 acres. This, with the 1,000 acres of patented land, is now held by the Churchill company.

One vital reason for the survey, McKisick said, is that the lake is actually drying up, and its bounding lines should be set forth while persons who have been familiar with its location and history are living.
