MEAT CONSERVATION DAYS ARE BY-GONE

WASHINGTON, July 11.—There is no longer need for meat conservation. The supply is plentiful, and patriotic citizens may freely disregard the meat-saving placards which are still displayed at many eating places.

Meat prices to the consumer are so high that he is denying himself and prices for livestock, especially beef and lambs, are so low that the producer is actually losing money. The problem confronting the Nation is serious if the United States is not to suffer a decline in the live stock industry.

Government supervision of the manufacture, sale and distribution of meat products is the real solution of the problem. It is believed by authorities who have made a study of the entire situation. Co-operation with state and municipal authorities would be absolutely essential to the smooth working of the scheme. Federal laws prohibiting unfair dealings, speculation and profiteering, by punishing the public with all facts concerning the industry, coupled with state and municipal laws exercising similar jurisdiction over intra-state and local business, is the only way that the people can expect to have

A Place Of Interest

One of the most interesting places in the city is the Kodak Department of Underwood's Pharmacy during the busy season that vacation days bring.

Dozens of rolls of Kodak film are developed each day and several hundred prints made from them.

Large tanks are used for development, each one capable of developing thirty-six rolls of film at one time. This process was devised by the Eastman Kodak Company and is the same that is used by every first-class Kodak room in the country.

After development the pictures are printed by means of automatic electric machines which are so adjusted that the margins print out exactly and correct exposures given by means of lamps that flash off and on at the will of the operator.

Prints are washed in a revolving drum and afterward dried between two immense blotters that are encased in a metal roll. Heated air is driven through the roll by an electric fan, thus drying several hundred prints in a very few minutes.

Underwoods also print all of the high-grade photographic postal cards that are for sale in Klamath Falls and in addition furnish outside towns like Weed and McCloud with local views of those places. Something like fifty thousand postal cards are printed each year. These are printed on a special machine capable of turning out over a thousand each hour.

Two young ladies are constantly employed in the dark room and even with the efficient mechanical devices provided find it difficult to keep up with the immense volume of work that pours in as, in addition to the local work, each mail brings films from all over Northern California and Southern Oregon.

Special effort is made to complete the work promptly, the motto of the Kodak Department being, "Bring us your films today—get your pictures tomorrow."

The Kodak Department at Underwoods is conducted on the same high plane as the pharmacy and that is that the "best" is none too good for their customers. Velox paper—only—is used in finishing pictures. This paper while more costly than many other brands, certainly produces the highest results.
