

STOWAWAY ON R-34 WITH AIRSHIP'S MASCOT

William W. Ballantyne

For a man facing court martial, William W. Ballantyne, stowaway on the first lighter than air ship to cross the Atlantic, does not seem a bit worried. He was slated to be one of the R-34's crew, but when it was decided to drop three men to lighten the load, he was one of the three. He concealed himself, however, and was not discovered until the dirigible was six hours at sea. He is seen here with Jazz, the mascot of the R-34.

SCHOOL ROOMS USED TO SORT YANK MAIL

COBLENZ, July 17.—American soldiers employed in the United States postoffice in Coblenz have been sorting mail in school rooms which during the early days of the war, were used by the then German Emperor for holding councils of war with his chiefs.

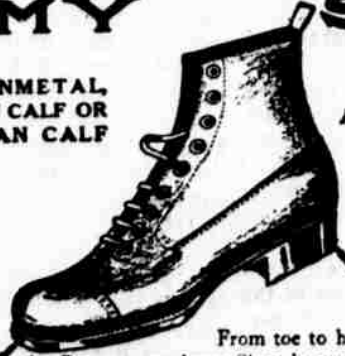

Soon after the beginning of the war in 1914, the Emperor was in Coblenz several months, spending several hours each day with army generals who were then using the school house as army headquarters. The school building is near the center of town and several large rooms on the first floor were taken over for the army postoffice a few days after the Americans took over the Coblenz bridgehead last December.

STATE SHOULD HELP WORKERS LIVE RIGHTLY

Protestant Church in America Issues Declaration

EAGER FOR JUSTICE

Say Churches Should be Interested in Civic and Economic Problems—Industry Should Recognize Living Wage Before Dividends are Considered

NEW YORK, July 13.—The Protestant church of this country represented in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America today issued a declaration that the state should "attempt to secure to the worker an income sufficient to maintain his family at a standard of living which the community can approve."

This was a part of the pronouncement on the attitude of the church toward social reconstruction which was drawn up by the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council. The Federal Council is a congress of thirty leading Christian bodies for united action.

The statement asserts that "It is a false idea that the churches are only concerned with religious, educational and charitable enterprises. They are or should be vitally concerned with civic, economic and other social interests."

Rights of working men to share in the control of the industries are set forth in this statement at length: "We have come upon times when people are not submissive to injustice or unnecessary privation and suffering," declares the church commission. "They are deeply and justly in earnest. If those who are the actual industrial, political and social leaders of the nation will not act upon the principle that the greatest shall be the servant of all, then the people themselves, with indignation and bitterness, are sure to take their destiny and that of the world into their own hands."

"Class consciousness and the use of violence are not confined to the revolutionary groups. The possession of wealth and education tend to the formation of classes, and industrial ownership and management to a class conscious ruling group. We observe the dangerous tendency of many state and municipal officials to deny fair hearings to radical offenders and to use unnecessary and provocative brutality during strikes. "Legislatures, judges and officials should act firmly but justly, without bluster and with unnecessary violence. Working men believe that they do not get an equal chance before the law and it is highly important whatever real basis there is for this conviction, should be removed."

FLU MEMORIES EVER LINGER

Struggle With Influenza Epidemic Still Continues North of Seward Peninsula in Alaska

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, July 17.—Gone are all but the memories of the Spanish influenza epidemic in the States, but up in the north of Seward Peninsula the struggle with the disease still continues; its memories will ever be vivid. Like the typhus of Europe, the disease did its work silently and thoroughly, leaving its heroes and heroines and a toll of dead that perhaps will never be known.

In the vicinity of Teller, Mrs. Bertha Gehrman, postmistress, writes: "Scarcely a dozen adults remain alive." Across the bay from Teller a Mrs. Fosso took care of the entire native mission, her husband also being seriously ill with the influenza. Some twenty-five native children fell to her tender hands and most of them were saved. This heroic white woman, Mrs. Gehrman relates, went to the river for ice, brought wood and coal for the fires, and when three adult natives died in her home, was compelled to drag the bodies out by herself. In spite of her efforts, however, seventy-two of the natives succumbed and were buried at the mission in a long trench.

From Teller, the storekeeper, a man by the name of Winfield, with one other assistant, both still uncovered, started out to visit native villages and bring what they could. On the American river they found a woman and five children in a cabin with seven dead bodies, some of which had been dead for a week. At Agiapuk, twenty-five miles from Teller, only three little children survived the influenza. They were in bed with their dead mother. In this village twenty-three dead bodies were buried.

At Cape Prince of Wales 186 natives died, and so on throughout the vast district whose white silences were made all the more grim by the stalking terror of unseen death, more terrible because aid was almost distant and pitifully insufficient at that.

RETURN TO DRAMA'S INFANCY

LONDON, July 17.—A scheme is on foot here to build theaters on motor lorries for the purpose of touring country districts. It would be a return to the methods of the drama's infancy in England. The old mystery plays of the sixteenth century were performed on platforms on wheels, and the theater was wheeled from point to point.
