WHERE WILL IT END?

Every man who has paid any attention to existing conditions has asked himself over and over again "Where will it end?" Thoughtful men have studied the situation and have been unable to reach a solution. Statesmen have viewed it almost with consternation, for they could see that the whole world was at a seething caldron of discontent. They could see that the whole human race is laboring under some indefinable, fear-breeding, doubt-creating strain. That there are growing up divisions without any apparent reason and that a condition of suppressed excitement seems to have taken possession of the whole world. Daily the strain has been getting greater until it seems it requires but a slight jar to bring things tumbling down upon us. Then suddenly the relief came and all of us settled back with a feeling that we have awakened from a terrible nightmare. Help came from an unexpected source and we at last realized that while such men as W. G. Lee, president of the trainmen's union, are at the helm of the United States has nothing to fear from the radicalism that is taking possession of the countries of Europe.

Viewing with dismay the mounting cost of living, the representatives of the railroad workmen presented a statement to President Wilson that one of two things must be done, either the cost of living must come down or the wages of the railroad men must go up. It was this semi-ultimatum that stirred into activity the administration forces and it was at one of the conferences that Mr. Lee made one of the frankest statements heard from either side. Among other things, he said:

"I will admit to you, gentlemen, that we are going the wrong way. I admit to you that it is time to call a halt, and I admit to you that until we get together, until we commence together to stop this, there will be hell in this country—and it is nearer today than I ever knew it in my years of experience.

"Just let somebody drop a match in this country of ours, and it will be a sorry day for all of us.

"Unless my vision is most terribly obscured there is something coming to us pretty soon in this country that we had better take notice of. We had something of peace in this country prior to the war conditions. We were getting along fairly well until profiteering became so noticeable everywhere and until the commodities that working people are compelled to pay for were permitted to be increased, doubled and trebled without any question, and often seemingly with the approval of the government.

"We are nearer war in this world today, I believe, than when the Kaiser threw out the guntlet. Our lawmakers are to blame, in my opinion, because the masses of the people would be behind them if they would attempt to correct it—and surely there is power to correct it—but instead they are playing politics, and some of these labor organizations are playing politics, and it is the same all down the line."

He covered the ground fully. We have all been out for ourselves and the devil for the hindmost—only that the devil has been asking possession of so many of the hindmost that the number has grown to be a menace to us all. The time is at hand when we must now stop and consider the cost of continuing on our present course, or whether we shall be willing to live and let live before we are all but destroyed—workingman and employer alike. If a cataclysm occurs that seems to threaten unless some change takes place, we shall suffer, workingman, bourgeois, capitalists—all. Each must consider the relative rights of the other and each must reach out the hand of cooperation and not the fist of compulsion. The safety valve has given us some relief and now is the time to cool down the fires of suspicion that have been threatening the stability of the nation.

At the Theatres

Margarita Fisher has added to a long list of successful characterizations the portrayal of Olive Barton, in "Put Up Your Hands," which is produced by the American Film Company as a three-fold triumph in action, photography and directorship. It is considered by pre-viewers as the strongest subject in which Miss Fisher ever appeared.

There is a strong dramatic appeal, which balances the love interest and the puzzling situations, and holds one's interest until the very last moment. One of the most humorous scenes is where the heroine throws conventions to the winds and turns one of her aunt's afternoon tea parties into a sparring exhibition. She is very captivating in regulation athletic togs and she just doesn't care how much she shocks the poor minister and family friends. Her ring partner is ever popular "Bull Montana," widely known as "the homeliest man on the screen." Miss Fisher sends him to the mat with a couple of short-arm jabs.

William Mong, as "Old High-ball Hazelitt" and Kate Price as Bridget have some brand new laugh-making stunts—and who wouldn't laugh at Kate Price and her clever wholesome comedy? George Perlotat, as Peter Barton, the capitalist, has a particularly strong role, appears at his very best.

"Put Up Your Hands" is a zippy, clever comedy-drama in which Margarita Fisher will make more friends than ever. It was written by L. V. Jefferson, author of several other Fisher stories. At the Liberty tonight.

CHASES RAINBOW 20 LONG YEARS

Spokane Man Continues Hunting Rich Gold Mine After Search of Twenty Years—Search so Far Has Been in Vain.

SPOKANE, Wash., Aug. 5.—Continuing a 20-year search for a rich gold mine, C. H. Roff recently left this city for the upper reaches of Salmon River, in North Idaho. For two decades, ever since he received from the death bed of one of the discoverers of the mine, directions for its location, Roff has been spending the greater part of his summers in the wilds of the Salmon River country, in a search, thus far in vain, for the treasure.

For many years James Hughes and a partner, whose name now is unknown, left this city each spring by devious trails. Each fall they returned with a goodly quantity of gold dust and nuggets. So carefully did they guard the secret of the source of their wealth that it never was discovered.

In the late nineties Hughes became so weakened from afflictions incident to his advanced age that he was unable to make the annual pilgrimage, and for two years his partner went alone to the mine. Upon his return from the second visit he was set upon, robbed and murdered on the Lower Salmon river, and his gold stolen.

That the secret of the mine's location might not be lost and the source of his wealth be stopped, Hughes then sought to describe to his friends, among them Roff, the route to the mine. Although Hughes, who never regained sufficient strength to revisit the source of his wealth, before he died he drew a rough map of the location, it never has been located.

The vein, while narrow, was so rich in gold, according to Hughes' story, that he and his partner simply pounded out the precious metal with a pestle in a little iron mortar, and then washed, panned and sacked it. If Roff can locate it, he believes he will be well repaid for his twenty years' search.

Diamond TIRES AND TUBES

AS RELIABLE AS THE MAINSPRING IN YOUR WATCH

When you bought your watch you took the mainspring for granted—of course it works. It ought to be good for a year, or two years. Maybe more. So long as it functions you forget it.

You ought to be able to forget the tubes in your automobile casing in just the same manner. Of course, any tube will last for a few months, but the tube that goes, and goes, and goes, year in and year out—the tube that outwears three or four casings—There's the tube that's a real satisfaction.

We can't point to any one thing in a Diamond Gray Tube that makes it so much better. We simply know that it is delivering the goods in unexampled fashion. Try 'em and see.

War Taught Public Lessons In Values

"The war has been responsible for great changes in the viewpoint of the American people.

"For one thing, it has made them use greater care in their purchases. Not that people are buying less, but they are studying the relative quality and price values in everything they use.

"Take tires, for instance. The man who could tell you all about his car, the number of miles he got from a gallon of gasoline and how much lubricating oil he consumed, used less thought in buying tires than he did in the selection of chocolate drops.

"He only knew that some tires wore out in an incredibly short space of time, but had no idea of how many tire miles he got to the dollar, or what brand of tires he got the most mileage from, or why. Now the tendency is to study the construction of tires and to test them for service.

"Of course this growing analysis of values and study of tire construction is a great source of satisfaction to us, for we have been working for years with a view to giving extra service on tires. We are quite sure that the more motorists study the downright value, superior construction and low cost per tire mile, the more certain we are to hold their trade."
