The Moose Hall was the scene of one of the most elaborate dances of the season, Friday evening, when the University of Oregon students, entertained their friends and alumnae. Dancing began at nine thirty and continued until after twelve with intermissions for Oregon songs and the feature. In the latter every lady was supplied with a sparkler which she lighted and carried during the dance, thus giving a brilliant touch to the whole affair.

The big hall was a maze of lemon yellow and green. The University colors, worked into conventional designs with a dropped latticed ceiling. A large electric-lighted "O" was set in one of the side walls to act as an Oregon reminder.
