CARNEGIE LAID AT REST TODAY

LENEX, Mass., Aug. 14.—With the simplicity that characterized his career in life, Andrew Carnegie, millionaire steel magnate and philanthropist, was laid at rest today at Sleepy Hollow, near Tarrytown.

No eulogy and no elaborate ceremonies were given at the funeral of the man who set a mark for giving a fortune for philanthropic purposes. Only the Carnegie household and immediate friends were present. The Presbyterian ritual was used.

BABY BORN

A nine pound baby was born to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dorner at their home at 2 West Main street last Saturday.

Cigars are regularly exported from the Philippines to forty countries.

PEPPERY PEP ARTIST HERE TO START JAZZ

Among the notables who arrived in the "deluxe Elks" special train was George O. Brandenburg, better known to Elks of the northwest as "Pep". The sojourn of "Pep" in Klamath Falls will be a busy one, as it is he who is in charge of the stunts at Pelican Bay tomorrow afternoon and evening.

"Just say for me that I'm glad to be here", said "Pep" this morning. "And I want the "Pep" committee of all lodges to be ready to jazz tomorrow. Nothing in the way of fun is barred and the only question now is what lodge of the state will produce the most unique stunt."

NOTICE.

All Catholics can attend mass tomorrow at the Sacred Heart Church at the corner of Eighth and High Streets at 6 and 8 a. m. Friday, August 15th, is a holy day of obligation.

It is said that a single drop of nicotine will kill a rabbit in three and a half minutes.

At the Theatres

"Jacques of the Silver North," which Select Pictures offers tonight to the patrons of the Star Theatre with Mitchell Lewis as the star, is a story of the Northwest country and a man who loved a woman with his heart, soul and body. He loved her as only men of the North can love. He gave all and asked nothing in return.

With a song in his heart and a laugh on his lips, Jacques La Rouge came and went to and from the trading post where Memory Baird lived with her father, an old pioneer. When she was trapped into marrying Trefery, a product of the elite and an outlaw in the north, it was Jacques who saved her. When she met and loved Warren Sherman, a man from the States who had gone North to redeem himself, it was Jacques who helped her. It was always Jacques and he finally received his reward in happiness.

With the passing of the years Caleb Conover was reputed to be worth sixty millions of dollars, and he was the acknowledged "boss" of his state. His meek little wife could hardly realize the wealth and power that were her husband's. She stood in awe and fear of him. He had become the slave of avarice, blind to the means and methods of his achievements. Chained to a load of error and ignorance, blinded by corrupt passions, he could not see in his trusted secretary and intellect that would undermine him. But by his own actions and the keen mind of a woman his earthly treasures and possessions were swept away. Then Conover realizes real success, the possession of one true friend.

See George Fawcett in "The Railroader," at the Temple Theatre tonight.

Many of the most interesting scenes in "The Shell Game," a Metro picture starring Emmy Wehlen, which is the attraction at the Liberty Theatre today were staged in an elaborate and spacious hotel setting that was built at the Metro studio. "The Shell Game" is a picturization of Kenneth L. Roberts' Saturday Evening Post story "Good-Will and Almond Shells."

In appointments, this set which occupied practically all the floor space of the big studio was as follows: entering from the street on the left was located the office of the hotel clerk the cashier's office and then the manager's office. Next to these were two elevators between which on the wall was placed a regulation United States Mail Box with a practical mail chute coming from the floors above. At the back of the lobby was the cigar and magazine stand, a grand staircase, and then a poker room. To the right rear was the hotel writing room, and at the right front was the ball-room. The whole set was built of marble finish, giving a palatial effect.

The settings built for the other rooms of the hotel are in keeping with the elaborate lobby and make this Metro screen play noteworthy in respect to settings. Unusually effective lighting effects were secured for the taking of these scenes in this fascinating screen romance.

The patrons of the Liberty will enjoy a good show today as there will be two big comedy pictures as well as the feature which will be "The Shell Game", starring Emmy Wehlen. Charlie Chaplin appears in "The Landlady's Pets" and Charlie is as funny as ever. There will also be a big Keystone Comedy entitled "Her Dramatic Debut." Thursday only can this big show be seen.
