

MAYOR OF ROSE CITY

double purpose of attending the convention and pioneering over what will some day be the great highway east of the Cascades, so that later, when he skoots along at forty or fifty miles an hour he will be able to tell future generations how "when I attended the Elks convention in Klamath Falls I dropped fifteen feet in a chuck hole a this point. There were some roads in those days. And the state was dry, then, too." Mr. Booth is register and receiver of the land office at The Dalles.

Judge Duffy of Prineville is among the representatives from that hustling city—the town that put itself on the map by building a railroad all its own. The Judge, as benefits the exalted office he holds, is looking with equanimity upon all the court houses of Klamath County, and weighing in the balance the advisability of putting one in his pocket and taking it back home.

The youngest "doc" to attend the Elks convention is little Miss Laura Lakin, granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Winick. She accompanied Dr. and Mrs. Rosenberg and son from Prineville. She will remain "just as long as I can until school starts," when she will return to her home in Prineville.

"Joe" Haner, county clerk of Douglas County, came to the convention simply, he said, "for the purpose of recording the deeds of the boys from home, so there will be no trouble in their alibis." It is a wise thought, and it would be a good idea if the rest of the counties adopted such an official plan.

"Farmer" Stone is in from the ranch near Malin for the tri-purpose of attending the festivities incident to the convention, viewing the air ships and ascertaining the latest market quotations on poultry and eggs. She states that if they had irrigation and could nail down the soil she would be able to raise bumper crops. Indications are that both wishes will be granted in the near future.

W. W. Brandstetter, the Exalted Ruler of the Eugene chapter, is reported drunk and lost, and his herd is worried about his whereabouts.

BILL'S CORNER

Serious and Frivolous Facts About Elks From All Over the State, Who Are Here for the Big Convention

Scott Howard, proprietor of the Clarendon hotel at Yreka, is visiting H. H. Edmonds, a local "Bill," who will run any state Elk, his weight, foot race. Mr. Edmonds reports that the supply of Elk at the barbecue was near exhausted before Mr. Howard got his fill.

"Laughed when I read about Senator Baldwin's resolution to jar you people loose from Oregon and take you onto California, but after coming down and looking you over, it is no laughing matter. I can see you fellows down here mean business and darned if I don't think you would find some way to work such a scheme if you went after it the way you have gone after court houses," and then the smile faded from our face. Who said it? Why, Mike Delahant. You know him, don't you? He is the chap that sells so much real estate up around Portland that everyone knows him in that burg. They tell a story of a lady who got on his phone by mistake, and when he told her who he was she accused him of telling her to go to hell and hunt for her party, and he had a time trying to square it with her. With his wife and daughter he is enjoying the convention and the beauties of Klamath scenery.

"Say, bo, you talk about hustlers! Come here and meet the man who put hustle into the word. Here he is—E. K. Jones. If you have anyone here who can keep in his dust, trot him out, and we will give you a heat that will melt things—" and just then the fire alarm rung, which went to prove that Jones must be some warm baby. He comes from Marshfield, and is a guest of George Stephenson—that elongated hustler that also hails from the City by the Sea. If Jones can keep up with Stephenson, he is some goer. He is one of the big real estate operators of the lumbering cities of the Coos Bay country, and while he admits that Klamath Falls is "some town," he won't admit that it has anything over his home city.

M. C. Maloney, chief poobah of the Marshfield Times, is here with both feet, and believe me, he is having some time! "Mike," and everyone in the Coos Bay country knows him by that name, is one of those "raining Irishmen" that everyone loves even when they hate him, for he never deals from the under side of the deck, but plays the game square clear through. Meeting him is to like him, and that is why the boys in that part of Oregon swear by him as well as swear at him, but always with an affectionate regard that shows he is one of the boys that never goes wrong.

Ask any of the boys from Marshfield if they know I. R. Chandler and they will look at you as if they thought you were crazy, and then they'll explode like a whizz-bang: Know HIM? know HIM! Why, Lord, man, he's Marshfield! Know HIM? Why, didn't he give us a lot for the new home we are building, and loaned us all the money we want at interest so low you don't have to consider it? Know HIM? Say, Neighbor, if you don't know Chandler you have missed the chance of your lifetime in not getting acquainted with one of the doggondest, best, all-round, big-hearted, enterprising, progressive—that was enough. Chandler must be a peach, for they were all singing his praises as far as you could hear their voices, each with an intonation of injury, as if to intimate what they thought of anyone who was so far behind the times as not to know I. R. Chandler. Mr. Chandler is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. George Stephenson during the convention.

R. A. Booth and wife of The Dalles are among those in the northeastern part of the state who have come to Klamath Falls for the
