QUITTERS!

When President Wilson decided to "carry the fight for the League of Nations to the people," it was the one thing needed to awaken the nation to the dangers confronting it.

In his St. Louis speech President Wilson stated: "Let them (the senate) show how they will prove that having gone into an enterprise that they are not absolutely contemptible quitters if they do not see the game through."

The report follows: Before a crowd that packed the huge Auditorium theater to the dressing rooms and overflowed into the streets, 10,000 strong, Senators William E. Borah of Idaho, Hiram Johnson of California and Medill McCormick of Illinois last night smashed away at President Wilson and the League of Nations until the great theater trembled from roof to pit with cries of "Impeach him! Take the power away from him!"

Point by point Senator Johnson took the President's famous 14 points, analyzed the way in which they had been incorporated in the treaty and asked "Who quit? Who was the quitter?"

"Wilson!" howled the audience. "He started off, as you recall, with open covenants of peace openly arrived at. You and I echoed the sentiment. All America applauded. Who quit? Who was the quitter?"

"Wilson!" bellowed a sea of voices. "Who endorsed vociferously the freedom of the seas and the British lion growled? Who quit?"

"Wilson!" came the roar. "He talked of removal of all economic barriers and we all yielded a ready assent. But economic barriers were forgotten. The American people didn't quit. Somebody else quit."

"Wilson!" was the roaring antiphony. "He talked, my friends, of adequate guarantees given and that armaments would be reduced. No armaments were ended. None will be reduced, admittedly under the League of Nations. Somebody quit upon the reduction of armaments."

Again the throng took up its cue. "He spoke of a free, open-minded and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial states and we all nodded in acquiescence. But there was nothing of that sort done. The American people did not quit. Somebody else did."

"Wilson!" Not since the last Bull Moose convention had the famous auditorium been rocked with such a demonstration. For minutes the speakers were compelled to remain silent with uplifted hands while the countless assemblage yelled itself hoarse.

Senator Borah characterized the treaty as a "cowardly, treacherous scheme."

"You can't have a league," he said, "without sacrificing Washington's policy of no European entanglements. They say they can do nothing without a unanimous vote. It is easy to have a unanimous vote behind closed doors where everybody has something to trade."

China could not have been robbed of Shantung without the consent of the United States, he declared.

"As Senator Johnson says," he went on, "our honored President was sitting in another man's game."

He was stopped, to wait fully three minutes, before he could go on.

"There should not be an American boy in Russia today except by unanimous vote," he shouted. "England has suggested—all England has to do now is to suggest—that we send 100,000 men to Constantinople."

"Impeach him! Don't let 'em go!" out of his hands! Do not let him send 'em!"

"Yes, they will be sent," thundered Borah. "They will be sent but they will be sent without the consent of the American people."

Again he was interrupted by a demonstration that lasted several minutes.

"You say 'take the power out of his hands,'" he went on. "Let me ask you this. 'Before we proceed to take the power out of his hands, let's refuse to put any more into his hands.'"

The crowd burst all bounds. Men ran up and down the aisles. Hats were flung upward. Showers of programs came from the balconies and galleries. Women screamed in their enthusiasm. The orchestra swept into the strains of a march and thousands of feet began tapping the beat.

"They say we are killing time," Senator Borah went on. "I am killing time for just one reason—to let the American people know the facts that have been withheld from them; facts that Wall Street knew months before the senate or the American people."

BURNING MONEY

Life is gay and blithe and sunny since the peace dove hit the breeze; every one is burning money just as though it grew on trees. I insist on thrift and saving, but there's none to heed my words; Johnnies say that I am raving, and throw money to the birds. Men are drawing princely wages, and their breasts are filled with mirth, and they jeer foreboding sages who predict a day of dearth; but that day will come as surely as tomorrow's sun shall rise; things will then be going poorly with the giddy spendthrift guys. Things won't boom along forever as they're booming now, my friends; and the man who's truly clever saves as ably as he spends. It is patent like these, that the kopeck won't be growing always on the shrubs and trees. There will come a day of trouble, when this boom is left behind, and the kopeck and the ruble will be mighty hard to find; happy then the lads whose wages

SLAVS ABLE TO WEATHER STORM

PRAGUE, Sept. 13.—By tightening the national belt a hole and careful conservation and organization of food supplies, Czechoslovakia can weather the winter safely in the opinion of the American food experts who have been surveying the country.

The bumper crops raised in the Sunflower State this year will be evidenced in the exhibits at the Kansas state fair, opening today at Hutchinson.

The oversupply of beet sugar is Czechoslovakia's big valuable asset and gives her a strategic position in Europe. The general situation here is reassuring to the American experts and, while there will be deprivation, they believe that with a well organized control of foods and close economy there will be no real suffering this winter.

JULY ISSUE McCLURE'S ON "UTILITIES ENTITLED TO PROTECTION"

The financial editor, in a forceful article in that Magazine, says:

"Public Utilities Commissions have been formed in many states to exercise control over privately owned public utilities, and have generally demonstrated that their regulation is beneficial. On the other hand, municipal ownership has proved generally unsuccessful, and is subject to objectionable and harmful political manipulation. The public should realize this fact, that its interests are those affected, and it is a fact that private ownership is ninety-nine times out of a hundred more efficient than ownership by a government, whether of a city or nation."

"In order that a public utility may expand, money is needed, and to get money credit is necessary. It is to the interest of a city and its inhabitants to see that credit is furnished. . . . Their interests are inextricably intertwined, and public indifference to and ignorance of conditions affecting this class of companies are serious hardships to their growth and expansion. . . . If the utilities are to be regulated they are entitled to protection."
