

BULL FIGHTER IS POLITICIAN

GUADALAJARA, Spain, Sept. 15.—"From the bull ring to the political arena," would make a fitting title to the history of the life of Luis Mazzantini, former torreador who has just been appointed governor of this province by King Alfonso XIII.

When Mazzantini retired from the ring in 1903 he was one of the most famous torreadors in Spain. Born in Elgsibar in Northern Spain of a well-to-do family, the new governor was sent to the University of Salamanca, where he obtained his degree of Doctor in Law. It was during his university days that, after a wager engaged into with some student companions, that he first faced the bull in the arena. He acquitted himself very creditably and the plaudits he received from the multitude completely turned his head away from dusty law books and stuffy court rooms. His earnings soon eclipsed that of the reigning torreadors of the day as he received 6,000 to 7,000 pesetas for each performance. In 1897 he accounted for 168 bulls for an income of 400,000 pesetas.

Since his retirement in 1903, Mazzantini has been prominent in local politics. He is a conservative.

JAPANESE WAY WITH BORES

People Have a Curious Method of Getting Rid of a Caller Who Outstays Welcome.

Once in a long while a caller comes to one's house or office or study and overstays his welcome, writes Cleland B. McAfee, in Forward. He of course is not conscious of this breach. All he needs is something to remind him he has stayed long enough. So far no device has been discovered for ending the call without risk of offense, though various formulas have been tried out. A few years ago a friend told a group of acquaintances that he always received his callers standing, and saw to it that there were no chairs in the room. Needless to say, the calls were always short. It was the common opinion among his listeners that this would be harder on him than on the callers. But that was his affair.

Perhaps the Japanese have come as near as any to solving the problem. A missionary to that land tells how, when a person makes too long a call, and apparently doesn't know it is time for him to leave, they stand a broom upside down somewhere in the house. This is a charm, supposed to throw a spell over the caller, and all unknown to himself he is compelled to go home. The broom doesn't have to be seen by the visitor; any obscure corner will do. The missionary tells of her own cook, not yet a Christian, who was so annoyed by callers who interfered with the dinner hour that she was just starting to turn the broom upside down when the callers left. Of course that confirmed the superstition. In America brooms have been known to rid a house of visitors, but ordinarily we adopt more drastic ways of handling it to gain that result.

It is not clear whether the Japanese method is more interesting as a superstition or as a courtesy. Certainly it is not peculiar to that nation to connect things which can have no real relation, but it is of the very essence of the race to think of a way to get things done without offending. At any rate there is the custom.

DIAMONDS HIDE IN AMERICA

Gems May One Day Be Mined on a Large Scale in This Country, Say Geologists.

Geologists, according to exchanges, believe that some day diamonds will be mined on a very large scale in the United States. They are confident there are valuable diamond mines hidden under this country, because many loose diamonds have been found in various sections. There must be a parent lode, they say, and this is believed to be in either the Rocky mountain or Appalachian range. Regular diamond chimneys, like those of South Africa, were found in Arkansas in 1906. They were filled with periodolite, akin to the famous Kimberlite of South Africa.

A farmer in Indiana, plowing a gravelly hillside, found the first diamond in America in 1837. More than 20 diamonds have been found in Indiana in the last 20 years, and one sold for $1,200. Other valuable diamonds have been found in Virginia, North Carolina, Wisconsin, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Idaho, Texas, Montana, Arizona and California. A laborer working in an excavation in Manchester, Va., found a stone weighing 23 1/2 karats in 1855. Numerous stones, weighing from three to 21 1/2 karats have been found in Wisconsin.

Consoling.

Bobby—Grandpa, why do you look so sad?

Grandpa—Ah, my lad, I was just thinking, here I am seventy years of age and I have done nothing that is likely to make posterity remember me—nothing.

Bobby—Oh, well, don't worry, grandpa. Maybe you'll still have a chance to live in history as somebody's grandfather.
