GERMAN CHINA REACHES MARKET

LONGTON, Eng., Sept. 9. (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The British pottery trade has taken alarm at the appearance of German china in the stores of the pottery district at prices which, manufacturing potters declare they cannot approach. Even in this city, with its important pottery industry, German ware is being offered below the cost of local manufacture. These German goods, it is stated, are being represented as of Dutch manufacture, but a member of the English China Manufacturers Association said that no such china was manufactured in Holland. The price of the German goods is fully fifty per cent under the cost of local production and this in Longton the real home of English china. If it is true, as has often been said, "said a pottery manufacturer, "that Germany has been accumulating vast stocks of manufactured goods during the war, it is possible she has been passing them over the Dutch border in exchange for butter and cheese. In that case the prospect of wholesale "dumping" from that quarter, added to the certainty of severe direct German competition in home and overseas markets will create a serious situation for the English china manufacturer."
