After I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, my kidneys acted perfectly regular and in every way I got good results. I never hesitate to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone who complains of kidney trouble, for I know they can't be beat." Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Tovrea had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

YANKS TEACH FISTIC SCIENCE TO FOREIGNERS
NEW YORK, Oct. 29, (By Mail).—The spread of boxing to countries which previous to the war were not familiar with the ring game has resulted in a number of novel incidents viewed in the light of American pugilistic traditions. Berlin has been the scene of belated attempt to develop the fistic art and at a recent series of contests the announcer gave a little harangue in advance, pointing out that as Germany wanted to be on even terms in all sports, boxing as fostered by French, English and Americans had been introduced. The first pair of boxers came respectively from Berlin and Vienna and weighed in at 115 and 120 German pounds respectively. The German pound is one-tenth heavier than the American. It was characteristic that no two boxers weighed the same. One was invariably heavier and had the advantage. The first victim, after putting up a fair show for two rounds, ran afoul of a wild swing of his opponent, and, so crumpled was the opponent, the "swipe" was with an open glove, and was really nothing more than a slap in the face. They were eight ounce gloves too. Down went the "boxer" who had done so well for two rounds. He took the count of nine, rose, and in a few seconds went down again, from a blow that could not have been more than a tap. He seemed to have lost courage, and though he was never "out" or anywhere near it, he lost all interest in fighting, and obediently perched himself on his hands and knees as the referee counted him out. The last bout was very short and sweet, principally because the favored man was a German who had lived in San Francisco for a long time—Hans Breitenstraeter he called himself in the program. Hans showed just a bit of class, and the knowledge that he had been in America and presumably knew something about boxing evidently showed his eight-pound lighter opponent. It was soon after the opening of the second round that Hans hit Friedrich a tap on the chin, and he promptly gave up the ghost. He was no more "out" than the other defeated pugilist. He had had enough, and he lay quite quietly until "ten" had sounded, then bounded to his feet and ran from the ring. In sharp contrast were the unusual circumstances attending the victory in London of Eugene Criqui, the Frenchman, over Walter Ross, the Englishman, for the premier bantam-weight honors of Europe. The final blow was delivered when Ross did not know the fight was "on" and when the ring was crowded with seconds and other enthusiastic spectators. Near the close of the fourteenth round a right hook to the jaw sent Ross to the mat apparently finished. After a few moments, seconds from both corners, with spectators, clambered into the ring. Ross was carried to his corner helpless and the French contingent began to celebrate. Amid the usual confusion attending a knock-out Eugene Corri, the referee, announced that the gong had sounded at the count of seven. Ross, revived but dazed, joined the gesticulating Frenchmen and others in the center of the ring, all the while calling "bout on," a familiar London expression after an interruption. At first no one paid any attention to him. Criqui finally realized that with the referee calling "bout on" he had a right to fight so he made his way through the crowd and planted a solid right on the unsuspecting Ross' jaw. There was no question about Ross being "out" after that and Criqui was officially credited with winning the championship by a knock-out in the fifteenth round. Try 'em. Herald Want Ads.
