WORK 'WORKLESS SUPPORT' TO THE FULL LIMIT

The "workless support" bonus that thousands of men and women were receiving in Berlin and Vienna is proving a heavy drain on the treasury—and it is charged that the bonus is so high that it is not worth the cost of the money that it costs to pay it. It is said that the government has no other resources and that it must resort to the "workless support" bonus to keep the economy from falling into a state of depression and with the intention of temporarily alleviating distress, complaint is made that this bonus system has become a costly burden on the government that can ill afford it.
The number of persons idle in Berlin during August was nearly a million. It is estimated that 750,000 of them do not want to work because they are being supported by the state and are free to carry on the illicit trade of the underworld, the fly-by-night gambler, the opium and cigarette vendor.
The streets and squares of Berlin where people congregate most are, despite occasional attempts of the police, seething hives of humanity, selling or buying poor soap, worthless matches, bogus postcards and inferior tinware and cigarettes that are sold at enormous prices. The price of the most common necessities of life has risen to such a point that the market is practically closed. Recently the police have been toiling to keep the streets free of these things.
The first thing that such idle people do is to go to the police station and get a "workless support" card. They had to go to the police station to get these cards and to get them they had to go to the police station. The police had to go to the police station to get these cards and to get them they had to go to the police station.
One of the most unpleasant features of Berlin street life is the array of wounded soldiers, suffering from broken or missing legs and arms, about whom or alleged "shell shock," who sit forlornly on the principal street and manipulate a violin or harmonica. With hands and features that tremble, these relics of the war beg from morning until long after midnight. Their "music" is always harrowing.
A one-legged hulk with the face of a criminal, dirty to the last degree, with a rough, unkempt beard, seems to have no difficulty with the police as he hobbles up and down Unter den Linden, positively insulting passersby, especially women. He fastens on them, often holds them by the arms, and demands, not beg, alms. Countless policemen pass up and down, but the man is always there.
The police no longer put down one gambling club or street gambler than the passion breaks out elsewhere. Thus recently, in lieu of some cheap clubs, a round table is widely used as a race track for six tiny automobiles.
The letter of a business man of Berlin telling of his experience when trying to get some repairs made on his house is commented on here as typical of the spirit of dislike of work that prevails in Germany since the revolution. He writes:
"I intended to have my house repaired and therefore sought a workman who before the war had done little things for me. I did not find the man at his house. Only his 7-year-old boy was there."
"Where is your father?" I asked.
"He is selling cigarettes on the Potsdamer Platz," the youngster replied.
"And your mother?"
"She is selling soap at the Anhalter railroad station."
"Well, moreover, is no one else here?"
"No; my big brother has gone to collect the workless support for father."

RED CROSS GIRL SAVES MONEY FROM BANDITS

ALEXANDROPOL, Armenia, Sept. 22, via Paris, Oct. 8.—Miss Ruth Stuart, formerly of the Children's Hospital, Boston, and the Sloane Hospital, New York, but now a member of the American Red Cross, has arrived here from Tiflis, after travelling three days and nights in a box car, with a bag containing 1,000,000 rubles for the use of the American Hospital and Orphanage in this city.

In the Transcaucasus, which is without police, money is usually brought from Tiflis by a corporal's guard, but as funds were urgently required and no guards were available, the bank decided to entrust the money to the good sense of the American nurse. She left without a soldier convoy and unarmed.

As the train left Tiflis the nurse was handed a sack containing a bushel of tri-republic notes (of Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan.) As soon as the train was enroute Miss Stuart emptied her personal effects from her suit-case and repacked it with the money. She placed the suit-case under the blanket on her bed, and sat upon it, beginning her watch of seventy-two hours.

At Meganlo, three men entered her car. They made signs that they were custom's inspectors and must search for contraband. Miss Stuart knew that the cars of foreign missions are not subject to search by the Georgian Government, but she said nothing and did not leave her seat. The alleged inspectors searched thoroughly, seemed puzzled, and left.

Outside Karakills, three horse men, in the uniforms of Cossacks, galloped out of a wood, firing at the train. Forty shots were exchanged between riders and passengers, none taking effect. The riders attempted to overtake the locomotive, which was slowly making a grade, but were stopped by a deep gully. During the encounter Miss Stuart did not look out of the car. She sat on the million rubles.

AIRPLANE SPRUCE USED FOR PAPER

PRINCE RUPERT, B. C., Oct. 12. —(By Mail).—Spruce logs which were intended, when they were felled on the islands of the Inside Passage, for use in war-time airplane construction, are making their way into the British Columbia pulp mills and finally into news print paper for eastern American publications.

Recently 13 carloads of news print paper were shipped from the Ocean Falls plant near here to New York for the New York Times. The paper was made from spruce logs cut on Queen Charlotte islands for airplane purposes.

Large amounts of lumber left over from the airplane stocks have been sold to the Ocean Falls mills for the making of news print paper.

Probably no publication in the Western world has anything approaching the volume of circulation enjoyed by a certain Chinese almanac, printed in Peking. Each edition of the almanac consists of more than eight million copies, which are sent into the provinces, and so great is the interest taken by the Chinese in the publication, so high the confidence reposed in the information contained, that not a single copy is returned to the printers.
