GOOD THING LOST

Uncle Henry Surely Had Marvelous Fertilizer.

Unfortunately, After It Had Demonstrated Its Amazing Effect on Growing Corn He Could Not Remember the Ingredients.

"Friday dandelions were in bloom at York, Pa. Saturday they were covered by six inches of snow."—Boston Globe.

Once more we have to thank the Boston Globe for jogging our memory, says the Lewiston Journal. How it all comes back to us, Uncle Henry on mother's side was a farmer-inventor. He rigged up all sorts of farm machinery which wouldn't operate anywhere except on paper, or in Uncle Henry's head. He was also a great hand to experiment with fertilizers, and while he was always on the track of a fertilizer that was going to produce a double crop of something or other his experiments usually resulted in reducing his crops materially, and the rest of the family had to do some pretty tall hustling to catch even.

One fall Uncle Henry produced a fertilizer that he was sure would revolutionize the farming industry, and if smell could have turned the trick it would have, too. His fertilizer had a bouquet that, when the wind was right, depopulated the country for a mile away from the house. The rest of the family went away to visit till the smell thinned out some or overcame Uncle Henry. There used to be a lot of skunks in our neighborhood, but they all moved away that fall. A German butcher who manufactured limburger cheese on the side offered Uncle Henry $5,000 for the secret of that smell, intending to manufacture a cheese that would make him a millionaire when he got it on the market. But Uncle Henry wouldn't sell. He said it was his duty to invent a fertilizer that would double crops and he was going to stick to it till he did, if he never had a cent. He had plenty of scent, however. When the family finally received word that a person might live in the house if he didn't breathe too deep nor too often they came back. Uncle Henry had become discouraged and buried his sample of the new fertilizer in the front yard. That night he fed the hens in about the same place, and when he threw out their corn they wouldn't go within ten feet of the place where the fertilizer was buried. That night it came on to snow, and it snowed hard for ten hours. After it stopped Uncle Henry's two youngest children, John and Hilda, put on their outdoor clothes and built a snow man right over the spot where the fertilizer was buried. Then they built a big snow house and played in it till night. The next morning when Uncle Henry went out to do the chores he was amazed to see, about six feet up in the air, the snow man and the snow house, apparently supported by thick green sticks with leaves upon them. He got over his surprise and investigated. He found that the green sticks were luscious cornstalks which had taken root and, nourished by his fertilizer, had sprung up in two days to their present height of 15 1/2 feet, and produced some of the finest fodder corn he ever saw. Unfortunately, Uncle Henry could never remember what he had put into that fertilizer, and, of course, his sample was gone, so he never got any pecuniary benefit from it.

Know How He Felt.

Theodore was delighted with his new suit, bought with a view to future use and with due regard to Theodore's rapid growing propensities. But when he wore it to school his joy was quickly turned to grief as the unfeeling boys frankly accused him of wearing his father's clothes. The teacher used her utmost tact to smooth out matters, but the tear-stained little face did not clear all day. The next day another boy appeared in a new coat evidently made from his mother's. The astrakhan collar was sufficient to stir up the "savage" state of the boys. The new garment was promptly dubbed "his sister's coat." Again did tears flow copiously and the teacher was at her wits' end to give comfort. Little Theodore slipped his arm around the weeping boy and said: "Don't cry, Jimmy; that's just the way I felt yesterday."

Ladybirds Did It.

Co-operating with the city of New Orleans and the state of Louisiana, the bureau of entomology, United States department of agriculture, completed during the year the control of the fluted scale in New Orleans and neighboring places. This was accomplished by the propagation and liberation of thousands of the natural enemy of this scale insect, the Australian ladybird. More than 300 colonies of the ladybirds were liberated over an area of 40 square miles. The distribution also was extended to the known outlying infestations of the fluted scale in Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas.

The Turning Point.

"I understand you have a son with Pershing." "Yes," answered Mr. Cobbles. "And when Henry left home I could see by the look in his eyes that he meant business." "He gave a good account of himself, no doubt?" "Well, it may sound like boasting for me to say it, but ten days after my boy landed in France the war was over."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

SON BORN TO WELL KNOWN LUMBERMAN.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Vove welcomed the arrival of a nine-and-a-half pound son today. Mother and child are doing nicely, according to report. Capt. J. P. Lee, county assessor, is very much interested in the event, being the grandfather of the new arrival, but is trying to keep his pride within reasonable bounds. The boy has been named Joseph James Vove, the first name for the grandfather. Captain Lee holds that the youngster is in direct line for the presidential succession, providing that the Democratic party holds out long enough.
