When Does the Day Begin?
 When does a day begin? Different nations have had their own methods of punctuating time. Our calendar follows the Romans in beginning the day at midnight; for all practical purposes we reckon it from sunrise to sunrise. The Athenians and the Hebrews, however, began their new day at sunset. In the story of Creation we are told, "And the evening and the morning were the first day." This Hebrew habit of beginning the day at sunset has survived even to our own time in regard to the day of rest. The whole significance of Burns' "Cotter's Saturday Night" is lost if we forget that to the Scotch Presbyterian Saturday night was a part of the Sabbath. The week's cares were thrown aside when the peasant saw, in the evening shadows, the beginning of the Lord's day.—Atlantic Monthly.

Freeze False Fur.
 A process patented in France consists in an improvement in the manufacture of stuffs or objects which imitate fur, plush or velvet, or for use as carpets and the like. The process starts with an animal's fur, or an assemblage of animal or vegetable fibers, and these are immobilized by freezing them in a block of ice.
 The ice is then sawed into slabs, and a slab is made to undergo a surface melting so as partially to free the hair or fibers on one side; then a suitable glue or cement is applied upon this surface.
 A sheet of flexible material acting as the basis of a new makeup is then laid on, so that the hairs adhere to it, and afterward the whole is freed from the ice by melting, leaving the hairs attached to the support. Rubber serves as a good basis for the glue or cement.

Not Sufficiently Cooked.
 A hunter, more boastful than successful, once joined a bear-hunting expedition. During the hunt, as this man was resting by the side of a rock and talking with another hunter, he remarked:
 "If there's anything I dote on, it's bear. A slice of bear steak nicely done is perfect!"
 "Well," said his companion, looking up, "I'm hanged if there isn't a bear now!"
 The man who "doted on bear" looked up, saw an immense grizzly standing on the top of the rock, gave a yell and leaped into the woods and disappeared. His companion soon overtook him, and said to the fugitive as he came up:
 "I thought you liked bear?"
 "Well, I do," said the runaway; "but that one ain't done enough!"

WELL OF MIRACULOUS POWER
 Waters in Cornish Town of Liskeard Are Reported to Confer Peculiar Benefits.

In Cornwall, near the town of Liskeard, is an ancient well, formerly supposed to be possessed of miraculous powers. It is the well of Saint Keyne, a pious virgin of the fifth century. According to the story, firmly believed in by all good Cornish folk, the blessed damsel laid a spell upon the cooling waters of the spring and thereafter all who drank of it became the masters of their own households, were they men or women.

After the death of Saint Keyne the tiny spring became the most visited spot in Cornwall. Every young married couple included it in their wedding trip. The poet Southey tells of an unusually foresighted bride who carried a bottle of the magic water to the church, forestalling her unfortunate husband. The men of Cornwall themselves, however, boast that they have refused to avail themselves of the blessings of the spring; that they are willing to submit to the rule of their wives.

The precious waters, by the side of a dusty highway, are protected by a tiny springhouse of stone, built by the Cornish folk of other days who were not ashamed to believe in the power of their spring. Their descendants have permitted the tiny building to crumble in neglect, forgotten by the roadside. Five huge trees curl their roots protectively about the fallen masonry—two oaks, two ash and the elm of tradition. They are of the same species, but are not the identical trees of the songs and poems. These ancient guardians of the holy well were blown down in a storm some 200 or 300 years ago. The trees of today were planted by a worthy Cornish squire early in the eighteenth century.—"Niksh," in Chicago Daily News.

HAVE HIGH MILITARY TITLE
 Three Men Hold Commissions From Uncle Sam as Full Generals in His Armies.

This is the first time in the history of the United States that the nation has had three full generals at the same time. Of course, we have a number bearing the prefixes of lieutenant, major or brigadier-general, but they do not wear four-starred shoulder straps. The three fortunate leaders are Tasker H. Bliss, Peyton C. March, chief of staff, and John J. Pershing, commander of the American forces in France. Only these four have preceded them as holders of the highest rank: George Washington, Ulysses S. Grant, William Tecumseh Sherman and Philip H. Sheridan.

The capture of Vicksburg on the Fourth of July, 1863, won Grant the title of major-general. The victory at Chattanooga in the following November caused him to be made lieutenant-general and commander in chief. In July, 1866, congress rewarded the hero with the rank of general when he was only 44 years old. Just before his inauguration as president in March, 1869, he resigned from the army and was succeeded as general by William Tecumseh Sherman. In 1883 Sherman resigned as commander in chief of the army, and was succeeded by "Little Phil" Sheridan, who three years later was advanced to lieutenant-general, then made a full general just before his death in 1888.—Carl Schurz Lowden.

In Need of Repair.
 Many years ago I attended a wedding in Cripple Creek, Colo., writes a correspondent of Chicago Tribune. All was progressing gayly until the bridegroom was called upon to produce the ring. In vain he felt in his trousers pocket; nothing could be found except a hole through which the ring had evidently fallen into his boot. He glared helplessly around the assembled guests.
 "Take off your boot," ordered his prospective mother-in-law. The young miner hesitated, the suspense and silence were painful. "Take off your boot," again came in strident tones, as the old lady crowded forward in a threatening manner.
 The young fellow reluctantly pulled off his boot, the ring was found—also a huge hole in the stocking through which five toes protruded. A painful silence ensued—but again the efficient old lady saved the day by remarking: "Sam, it's high time you were married."

Electric Transmission.
 How different it is now, in the transmission of electric power, from what it was, say, 25 years ago, when there had to be relay stations for the trolleys every ten miles or so. For example, in California, physical connection of three large hydro-electric systems has been made by means of which power generated near the California-Oregon line is transmitted continuously for a distance of 300 miles to the San Francisco bay region. Experts were wont to say in the nineties that nothing like this could be done. But it is being done, and experts are now proclaiming that other and greater things contemplated in electric power transmission are impossible. Time will perhaps show that they are not.
