The Mistletoe Kiss

By J. E. SHERWIN

HERE never was such a doll. It was the very acme of toy invention, classic of form, graceful of line, unparalleled in materials duplications of the latest modes of fashion. Flexible of joints, some inner mechanism moved eyes and lips, and then it talked—talked? Bless you! yes, in the clearest childish accents. No wonder it did all these things, for when Warren Brill asked the price, the salesman replied:

"Seventy-five dollars, sir."

"Whew!" aspirated Roy Burton, who had accompanied Brill on his Christmas shopping tour.

"I'll take it," said the latter.

"Why, you've gone clear daffy," remonstrated Burton. "You've got no little ones at home."

"N-no, that's so," replied Warren in his diffident, hesitating way, "but you see," and he grew flustered—"Miss Deere—"

"Eh! Nellie Deere? Surely you're not thinking of giving that grown up beauty a doll?"

"Oh, dear no!" answered Brill, and he fluttered like a frightened schoolboy. "I wouldn't dare to offer her a gift. I was thinking of presenting the doll to her little niece, Dorothy. I hope Miss Deere won't resent my taking such a liberty. Of course we're quite friendly—"

"Friendly!" interrupted Burton. "That's putting it mildly. Why, everybody knows you're in love with Nellie, and the way she favors your company shows how she regards you."

"Oh, do you think so, positively?" gasped Warren. His face was a vast map of longing hope. "You don't know how—how happy you make me. Just put the doll aside," to the salesman. "I shall want some special records made and I'll see you later."

"It's a bold scheme," soliloquized Warren, and proceeded straight back to the toy store. He sought out the salesman. "Now, as I understand it," he said, "a regular baby phonograph device inside the doll makes it say all those cute things, when you operate a button?"

"That's it," accented the clerk.

"And I can have a special record made?"

"Surely. We can attend to that for you."

Warren met Nellie on the street the day before Christmas, and she mentioned the fact that she had been very much disappointed as to the Christmas tree they had received, it being straggly and undersized.

"Why," spoke Warren eagerly, "I saw the finest layout of trees down at Chester only yesterday, Miss Deere. I haven't a thing to do the rest of the day. Won't you deputize me to help give the little ones a good time?"

Warren arrived at the Deere home with the tree and various packages. He helped Nellie trim the tree. He operated the talking doll to even the wonderment of Mr. and Mrs. Deere, who at ten o'clock indulgently retired.

Warren began to act nervous. He had placed a new record specially by his side, his finger on the button. Nellie was looping a string made to order inside the doll. He set it on a chair of holly near the folding doors. She looked at him strangely as he said:

"Miss Deere—Nellie, I have something to say to you—that is—yes—something to tell you, and can't say it. Won't you please listen to what my little friend here, the doll, will say for me, and then maybe—maybe you'll say something, too."

"Dear Nellie, I love you. I know that you are a star high above me, and the best man in the world unworthy of you; but I can give you every luxury and add the greatest one of all—love. Say it's not altogether hopeless."

Nellie blushed peony red. Then she smiled slightly, almost quizzically. She moved four steps. They brought her directly under the mistletoe. Warren arose to his feet.

"Oh, Nellie!" he cried, "you— you didn't get under that mistletoe on purpose?"

She hung her head embarrassed, yet inviting. He stole to her, brave as a lion. He circled her waist with his arm. She snuggled closer; he pressed his lips to hers.

"Oh, a merry Christmas to all the world," he jubilated expansively, and in the accents there was the cheer of a happy, happy man.

COACHMAN IS GUARDIAN OF ASTOR DESTINY

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Nov. 14.—(By Mail).—It was an up-to-date "Man on the Box" who guided the destinies of Lady Astor's campaign to determine whether she would be the first woman commoner of England.

More than a score of newspaper correspondents who trailed Lady Astor during her electioneering and junketing about Plymouth, had difficulty for some time in learning in advance where she intended to make her next appeal for votes. The reason developed when it was learned that it was neither Lady Astor nor Lord Astor who were guiding her meanderings, but the ruddy-faced, bulky old coachman, Churchwood, who had been serving the Astor family through three political battles. He acknowledged that he had been made director-general of Lady Astor's campaign.

Silk-hatted and officious executives of the Unionist party held council daily and drafted the candidate's strategic moves, but it was Churchwood—also silk-hatted, although less officious—who really determined whether these plans should be executed or vetoed.

Lady Astor would enter her carriage in the morning. Churchwood would whip up the elegant pair of sorrels and the candidate would roll away, unmindful of whither she was bound. If Churchwood from his vantage point saw a street corner gathering or a lowly abode where Lady Astor might get a hearing, he would rein in the horses without asking leave, and let her do the rest.

When the speech and the ensuing cross-fire of questions had ended, or when Churchwood sensed a waning in the interest of the auditors, he would jerk a peremptory thumb in the direction of the back seat, saying: "Get in." Whereupon Lady Astor would resume her place in the carriage and it would proceed to the next halt.

When Lord Astor ended the previous campaign, Churchwood delivered his felicitations and went back to his regular occupation as stable man with one of the Plymouth coach services. But this time he was ambitious, as he confided to the correspondent of the Associated Press, to journey to London with Lady Astor herself, who was more certain of the outcome of the election than Churchwood.

He was hopeful that in a few months he would be driving her from her residence to the House of Commons and waiting for her to finish haranguing the house, but was a bit fearful lest she should elect a motor for her London needs. In that event Churchwood intended to reserve his curry-comb and hoof-hook and go back to his livery stable to await the next Astor campaign.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Dec. 13.—Written on papyrus yellow with age in characters of the ancient Armenian, a language now entirely out of use, a Bible owned by G. E. Atkinson, social secretary of the Y. M. C. A. here, is attracting much attention.

The little book, which, it is estimated, was written with vegetable inks about 1000 years ago, is decorated with Oriental arabesques in red, gold and blue. It was sent to Mr. Atkinson by his brother, a medical worker in Asia Minor, who lost his life in the war.

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP

Superiority Demonstrated in World War

E. N. Hurley, who served throughout the war as chairman of the United States Shipping Board, was asked what in his job had impressed him most. He answered:

"The efficiency of private ownership and operation as compared with public ownership and operation—ALL PRODUCTION CENTERS ON THE COST—you can't get away from that. Shift responsibility for the cost, for the best possible result under a given set of circumstances and you shift the responsibility for efficiency. On the Shipping Board, we shifted this responsibility from private shipbuilding concerns to the Government.

"With the shifting of responsibility of cost to the Government, that keen interest in results which follows private initiative was gone. THERE YOU HAVE THE WHOLE PROBLEM AS BETWEEN PUBLIC OWNERSHIP AND PRIVATE OWNERSHIP STATED.

"I don't know of a government-owned plant that produces more than two-thirds efficiency. In the years to come some way may be found to keep incentive to best endeavor in men under government ownership, but until that is discovered that system may be classed as a failure."
