LITTLE RED LIZARDS.

"It's very funny," said the little red lizard to his companion as they both crawled along a walk which led from a house to the street, "but people really don't know how to appreciate things."

"I know what you mean," said the second little red lizard whose name was Lizzie. The first little red lizard was named Lionel, which his mother had thought was a very beautiful name.

"Yes, I know what you mean," Lizzie said again. "And what is more, I agree with you. People don't know how to appreciate things. Now here there is a nice cool day. It's not too cool. It's not such a day as there will be after a time."

"In fact, it is rather an unusual autumn day, or fall day, or whatever you want to call it."

"I'm not particular whether it is called an autumn day or a fall day," said Lionel. "So continue."

"And," continued Lizzie, "it is a rainy day. That is best of all. The streets are wet, the grass is wet, there is a delicious dampness everywhere."

"Yes," said Lionel, "and people never speak of there being a delicious dampness over everything. There again they are so foolish. They don't think dampness is delicious. We fully appreciate a day like this, when we can crawl along and when everything is nice and wet. We don't care for other days like we do for these days."

"Life is very funny," said Lizzie. "Life and people both. Now when I say that I mean life is funny I mean that there are so many amusing things happening all the time."

"For instance, while I was sitting on this walk or rather sprawling on this walk I heard the people talking on the porch. Not only did they talk against the dampness and grumble because it was raining but they told such curious stories."

"Will you tell them to me?" said Lionel. "Part of the time we were on the walk in front of the house, I was thinking of a talk I had had only the other day when it was rainy with Leopold Lizard."

"I Agree With You."

"Yes," said Lizzie. "Well, of course they were talking about the weather to begin with and as a matter of fact they spoke about it every once in awhile all the time and they ended off talking about it, too."

"One of them saw me and spoke of how funny it was we came out and seemed to enjoy such days."

"But they told such curious stories. One of them told how a child had dreamed of bats and had wakened up in the middle of the night quite frightened by her dream. Just imagine how foolish that was. Gracious, there are so many people who think every one must be just as they are. I've never heard that bats were harmful."

"And the child was especially frightened because she said one of the bats scolded her in her dream and that the bat was a middle-aged but who was particularly cross looking."

"How absurd," said Lionel.

"And they told that they had heard wild pigeons ate more than any other animals in proportion to their size, meaning that considering their size they ate more than any other creatures of that same size."

"That isn't so funny. They told it as something very curious. To me it is more curious that they should think it so queer, because I think people do a good deal of eating themselves and that it's not in the least becoming of them to talk about the way other creatures eat!"

"Then they talked of butterflies who opened and shut their wings when they were surprised and of the noise they made with their wings and of butterflies who'd gone for their winter sleep."

"They spoke of caterpillars who would strike their heads on the leaves and make sounds when they were resting or swinging and they thought that was very queer."

"But to me the queer thing is that the people should talk about such things. Why shouldn't butterflies have their way of talking just as people have?"

"No reason at all why they should not," said Lionel.

"Well," said Lizzie, "I'm glad we're sensible and not queer, though I suppose everyone thinks other ways from their own are queer. For here I am talking about people being queer because they think other creatures are queer. And I'm doing the same thing in my thoughts, too!"

"PAL" GOOD WORD, BUT SLANG

Term in Good Society Accepted as Meaning "Chum;" in Vocabulary of Crime Stands for Accomplice.

The dictionary recognizes the right of "pal" to inclusion in our language, though designating it as slang. Like many words thus classed, it is a terse way of expressing a relationship readily understood but not so easily defined. In good society it is accepted as meaning a chum, a congenial companion; in the vocabulary of crime it stands for a confederate or accomplice.

The most natural and instinctive thing in life is a desire for congenial companionship; only the abnormally developed mentality can live on a sufficiently exalted—or shall we say self-centered—plane as to other personalities.

A pal is an intimate friend of either sex, to whom one may "talk as the heart beats," may confide hopes, fears, happiness and disappointments, certain the trust will not be betrayed. Between opposite sexes is excluded lovemaking or "spooning," but means a broad, intelligent, faithful, yet subtle friendship, since all friends are not pals; not necessarily a unanimity of opinion, but a disposition to "agree to disagree" in case of differences. There is a tacit respect for each other's individuality.

Perhaps one of the best tests of a pal is that the two enjoy silence together; there is a sense of companionship in being together without the constant trickle of words which most of us feel necessary unless one would be thought unsocial.—Detroit Free Press.
