TURKISH TRADE POSSIBILITIES ON INCREASE

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 20.—(Correspondence Associated Press) Turkey is rarely pictured as a country of business possibilities but rather as the traditional home of graft, politics, massacres, and veiled women.

Yet, according to Americans of some vision who have long been here or others who have come since the close of the war, something may be done with the Turk and a lot with his country in the way of agricultural development, in exploiting marole deposits on the sea of Marmora, coal on the shores of the Black Sea and in the Heraklee basin, and copper at Arghana, Maden and in the interior mountains between Diabakhr and Kharput.

There has been a vast quantity of misinformation circulated about the value of Turkish concessions and members of the American mission headed by General Harbord came to the conclusion that Turkey's greatest wealth lies in her unirrigated, treeless soil, that it would be possible to make her wealthy if she had honest government irrigation and her mountains and plains covered with quick-growing cottonwood. Gen. Harbord, an expert agricultural observer, believes that the American cottonwood would change the gaunt face of Turkey's mountains and valleys.

Turkey's greatest value, however, lies in her geographical position and it is believed that anyone operating on a large scale from Smyrna and Constantinople, in particular, will have three avenues for trade extension one to the Balkans, one along the Bagdad railway which the British now control and are investing in heavily pushing its line beyond Bagdad to the oil fields of Mesopotamia, and on to the Indian Ocean; and a third avenue into the Black Sea countries including south Russia and the rich Caucasus.

G. He Ravndal, American Commissioner and Consul-General in Constantinople, who has served in Turkey for some twenty years, is impressed with American opportunities in the Near East. He says that no matter how the Turkish question be solved by the Peace Conference, the result is certain to afford sufficient freedom and stability for the economic development which has been so long arrested and which now is on the eve of obeying its momentum. He urges, American business men to "be up and doing" so that the new American merchant marine may prove not to have been built in vain. Mr. Ravndal also urges American shipping interests to consult American consuls and the American shipping interests to consult American consuls and the American Chamber of Commerce for the Levant in picking for their steamship lines.

Mr. Ravndal said to The Associated Press: "American trade figures in Constantinople are climbing up. In the three months ending September 30, 1919, exports from this city to America amounted to $2,950,000 as against $1,300,000 for the June quarter. These are considerably in excess of pre-war figures but by far the greater increase is in imports to Constantinople from America. The balance of trade is now overwhelmingly in favor of America while before the war it was adverse.

"Under prevailing economic conditions it were better for both countries if the trade balance could be reversed and exchange equalized. For that purpose America must send men out here to explore natural resources which still remain in a primitive state of exploitation. Take raw silk for an example. Ment Lebanon, Brusa, Asia Minor, Caucasus and Central Asia can produce enough raw silk to render the American silk manufacturing industry independent of Yokohama. But this can only be achieved by Americans establishing themselves in the Near East just as Americans have done in the matter of licorice root and cigarette tobacco.

Fortunately we now have numerous American merchantmen plying in the Levant trade and the establishment of American banks in the commercial centers of the Near East is only a question of weeks or months. The American commercial outlook in the Levant and the Balkans is indeed bright.

"Constantinople may be termed the hub of the Near East. The tributary territory of this ancient city which for centuries was the clearing house of the world's civilization, is constantly expanding especially towards the Caucasus and South Russia and the countries of the Danube. Under a stable and just government Constantinople will regain much of its past glory. It is the main door to Asia to which, it is claimed the 20th century belongs.

"What is principally wanted out here to insure American commercial ascendancy is American capital to be used in the development of natural resources and for purposes of reconstruction.

"In the Federal Reserve Act and the Webb-Pomerene Act means have been provided for an adequate extension of American foreign trade, one authorizing American banks abroad and the other affording proper trade organization. Except in the matter of our navigation laws, it is not legislation which now is wanted as much as vision and courage among our manufacturers and merchants.

"Our leaders of industry never had a finer chance to show their mettle than at present. South Russia calls them to impudently appealing to their foresight as no other country appealed before. Trans-Caucasia challenges their wisdom. Asia Minor summons them to show their spirit. Of these suggested operations, Constantinople is the unquestioned base."

"This is no time for dawdling. Let us be up and doing and help to win peace and prosperity for ourselves and others as we help ourselves and others so splendidly in the war."
