BAKER-LEONARD FEUD MYSTERY

How two such staid and usually even-tempered gentlemen as Fred A. Baker, of the First State & Savings bank, and Dr. W. A. Leonard, the well-known dentist, ever reached the stage of controversy where nothing but gore will assuage the hurts that honor feels, is a mystery to their friends, but it is a fact that each of the disputants have deposited a ten-dollar greenback with the secretary of the local boxing commission, said ten dollars to be forfeited to the commission treasury by the first man who backs upon a challenge to meet in fist combat in the preliminary bout of the next boxing exhibition staged by the commission.

Speculation is rife as to what has roused the gladiatorial instinct so strongly in the breasts of the banker and doctor. Neither of them seems to be able to tell just when the cause belli arose, or how, but both swear that it has rix to a height where a squared circle (Baker wants it 40 foot square, claiming that no smaller space will give scope for a demonstration of superior footwork), and eight-ounce gloves will settle it.

"Personally I feel for Dr. Leonard the affection of a brother," declared Mr. Baker, when questioned, "but the businesslike way in which he delved into one of my molars on the recent occasion of my only professional relation with him, has roused me to overpowering resentment. He had me flat on my back and took undue advantage of me and, while he filled the molar satisfactorily, he also filled my soul with revengeful desire. I have picked out the exact spot on Dr. Leonard's nose on which I expect to satisfy my primordial longings. I think, also, that a cauliflower ear would improve his appearance."

From the other hostile camp the following communique has been issued:

"What I have done to Baker in a professional capacity is not a circumstance to what I will do when I get a chance at him with the gloves. I believe, however, he is due to forfeit the ten dollars. Still, I am taking no chances and have started a course of rigid training. He has about as much chance of pinning a cauliflower ear on me as he has of becoming president of the Woman's Suffrage league. Just wait and see, that's all."

SEES SIGNS IN EVERYTHING

Average Serbian Superstitious to a Degree That to Westerners Seems Almost Incomprehensible.

The daily life of the Serbian is said to be full of superstition. He is superstitious about the manner in which he rises in the morning, about what first meets his sight, how he dresses and washes and whom he meets—of what food he eats and the time and manner of serving throughout the entire day. Attention is also paid to whether the cocks crow in time, whether dogs bark much, if frogs croak or the wind blows. Again, special notice is taken of the kind of rain that falls, thunder, how stars shine, if the moon has a halo, if it shines through a cloud, etc., etc.

The "Evil Eye" is alone accountable for disease and death. The Serbian believes that for each malady that flesh is heir to God has given a remedy. He believes that for each pain there is a healing herb. He believes in witches—beautiful young maidens who come forth from the dew and are nourished in a mysterious mountain. They meet in the branches of trees and are most dangerous at supper time.

Started Mussel Industry.

Mussel culture in France—where it is carried on more extensively than anywhere else, originated so far back as 1235, when an Irish ship was wrecked near La Rochelle.

One of the rescued sailors, James Walton, being hard put to it for a living, conceived the plan of setting nets on poles for the capture of sea-fowl at night, the muddy shores of the bay being frequented by these birds in large numbers.

Before long he noticed that myriads of young mussels became attached to the stakes, and that, being above the level of the mud, these grew rapidly. Thereupon he interlarded branches of trees between the stakes, thus forming a kind of wicker-work, which also became crated with mussels.

Walton's example was followed by some of the natives of La Rochelle, and an industry was started which has now flourished for close on 800 years.

Camp Meeting Old Idea.

Camp meetings, gatherings of devout persons, held usually in thinly populated districts and continued for several days at a time, with the view of securing prolonged and uninterrupted religious exercises and assemblies of a like kind, have been more or less usual at various periods in the history of the Christian church. The introduction of the protracted camp meetings into England in 1799 by Lorenzo Dow led to the separation of the Primitive Methodists from the Wesleyans. Camp meetings are especially associated with Methodism in America, where they originated about 1790 among Presbyterians and Baptists, but afterwards became almost wholly Methodist. The date of the first camp meeting in America is given in Dr. Bacon's "History of American Christianity" as in July, 1800, in Logan county, Kentucky.

Armadillo as a Pet.

In Argentina a common household pet is the small armadillo called mato, which is only about 15 inches long. Doctor Bergner says that when it rolls itself into a ball its unarmored legs disappear into the shell and the head closes it securely.

The animal cannot straighten out its body. It has a singular tripping gait upon the tips of two toes on which the claws are longer than the others. Children play with it by rolling it about like a ball or letting it run on a board in order to enjoy its funny gait.

It is quite harmless, soon gets tame, and eats out of the children's hands.—Scientific American.

Uniform Type for the Blind.

American libraries for the blind are rejoicing over the fact that they will no longer be obliged to have books in five different kinds of raised letters in order to accommodate readers taught in different parts of the country and at different periods. After many years of discussion a uniform type, to be known as "revised Braille," has been agreed upon, and hereafter all books embossed in this country are to be in the new type. "The Deserter," by Richard Harding Davis, was the first book to be published in revised Braille.—Scientific American.

"Fish-Eyes" and "Sleepy" Diamonds

by W. C. Davenport.

The commonest fault in Diamonds after bad color is lack of brilliancy. This lack is due to improper cutting. Improper cutting usually may be traced, not to lack of skill, but to an unwilling need to sacrifice a little weight. Improperly cut stones usually fall into two classes—those that are overthick and those that are over-spread. An over thick or lumpy stone fails in brilliancy in the center. It is called "Sleepy". An over-spread stone leaks light in the center. Such a one is referred to as a "Fish Eye". These are faults that should be avoided in selecting a diamond, since brilliancy is more to be desired than weight. As a matter of fact a brilliant stone usually appears larger than a heavier stone of less brilliancy.

Have you seen Davenport's Diamonds. I also have one of the most up-to-date stocks in Pearl necklaces, Bracelet Watches, stick pins, Ladies and gents rings, in fact everything in the jewelry line. "No old stock." Every thing fresh and new from the factory. Prices right—no high rents. The little old homely man sitting in the window at 733 Main Street. Look me up.
