KID MCCOY AGAIN SEEN IN HIS OLD PRIZE RING TOGS.

On the program of the latest exposition of the "voiceless art" made by David Wark Griffith from a story by Thomas Burke, "Limehouse Nights," and called "Broken Blossoms," the name of Norman Selby will be found, playing the part of a prize-fighter, a part which this Indiana man played so well in real life. Audiences who see "Broken Blossoms" during its run at the Liberty Theatre will learn with considerable interest that behind this engagement of Selby, known to the ring as "Kid McCoy," lies a story.

Battling was a type that is too little 15-year-old Lucy, to whom the mystery of life and death is brought by the Chinese poet, Chang Huan. Of him his creator wrote:—"Battling was a type that is too common in the eastern districts of London: a type that upsets all accepted classifications. He wouldn't be classed. He was a curious mixture of athleticism and degeneracy. He could run like a deer, leap like a greyhound, fight like a machine, and drink like a suction-hose. He was a bully; he had the courage of the high hero. He was an open-air sport; he had the vices of a French decadent."

Yet with all his dominance over the toughs of the East India dock district he had to come, at the last, to meet a real fighter.

With his quick sense of appropriateness it was plain to Mr. Griffith that the fight of Battling Burrows in the prize ring must be no less realistic and artistic than any of the other scenes in this moving drama of the London slums. And so he picked the one man who, even if he has passed the age when fighting is a joy, yet remains in the memories of his admirers, as the one clean, crafty, adept master of his profession.

So it is that once more in "Broken Blossoms" you see Kid McCoy, with all his old cleverness; his contempt for his ring money; his smashing blows and deft defense, trying to beat down the brutal father of poor broken Lucy, and so enraging the bully by his skill that when Battling Burrows emerges victorious from the ring and flushed with pride, his decadent mind is ready for the savage cry, "My daughter with a Chink Bill! me, I'll show 'em," and so rush out to be the instrument of the Fates in the tragic climax of one of the most poignantly beautiful love stories that the American stage has seen.

"Broken Blossoms," has its first showing tonight.

POE VALLEY RANCHER AND OLENE GIRL WED

Edward John Roberts, a well known rancher of Poe valley, and Miss Pauline Turner were married this afternoon by Justice N. J. Chapman. The bride's father operates sawmill near Olene and the young people are both well known here.
