The Christmas menu is now demanding the attention of the housewife. She is giving the market careful attention for holiday-dinner-suggestions that will not only appeal to the family circle but will fit the family purse as well.

There is so much available in the markets at this season, that it is not a question of what can be had, but of what to select. The array of good things for the table is fairly bewildering. There is turkey of course, and for those who do not feel justified in purchasing the great American bird, the less expensive chicken is ready to do service.

Two menus are offered for the guidance of the housewife. One is for a dinner of moderate cost, but with the necessary variety to make the feast complete and satisfying. The other menu is more expensive and elaborate.

These combinations are offered as suggestions and may be varied to suit the tastes of the individual without detracting from the excellence of the Christmas feast. Other meats such as roast pork, roast lamb, roast beef or chicken pie and game may be substituted for the roast turkey or chicken.
