TEXT OF OLCOTT'S MESSAGE TO SOLONS

Independent of the two divisions acting in the capacity of an arbitrator.

I still feel, however, that a complete separation of the two interests would lead to more harmonious relations.

But there must be give and take in arriving at a conclusion where many minds are thinking along many lines, and the best compromise the legislature may effect which to my mind will bring about harmony and good results will be acceptable to the executive office.

Whatever may be your disposition of the matter, I wish to assert positively that the chief executive of the state should not be a member of either or of any fish and game commission. It is not properly in line with the sphere of his duties, it is not for the best welfare of the interests to be represented, nor is it productive of the best results. To separate the executive office from a membership on the commission is the right and proper thing to do, and I assure you would be meeting with my hearty approval as a move dictated by discerning wisdom.

The fish and game situation is one close to the hearts of many thousands of our people, it is one of too far-reaching importance to allow petty considerations to override and overrule the big results that may be attained. I am confident that, as representatives of the people of the state of Oregon, you will enter into a discussion of this question calmly and dispassionately, with your minds removed from local and personal prejudices and with the single goal in view—the greater welfare of all the state.

IONE, Jan. 13.—The Christmas vacation of the lone schools has been continued for one week on account of an epidemic of mumps. E. A. Brown, eighth grade teacher, and 19 of his pupils are ill. Principal Kurtzman is also a victim.

It is the habit of bees to place their honey in the coolest place in the hive, and the young insects in separate the executive office from a

FAMOUS S. F. BARS SELL FOR PITTANCE

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 13.—Eleven years ago J. J. Wilson, proprietor of the once famous Nevada cafe at Kearney and Post streets here, paid $25,000 for the handsome bar and back bar of his establishment. The other day it was sold at auction for $165.

Similarly the bar of the old Richeieu, Kearney, Geary and Market streets, was auctioned recently for $210. It cost $8,000.

Other sales of bars here are reported, the $16,000 mahogany of the College Inn bringing $315 and the $2,500 bar of the Odeon cafe bringing $200.

OFFICIAL BELIEVES IN "DOLLING UP"

JUAREZ, Mex., Jan. 13.—J. Felipe Valle, customs collector at this port, is a believer in the psychology of clothes. For this reason he has asked the Mexican secretary of the treasury to allow him an appropriation of approximately 2,000 pesos for uniforms for himself and his inspectors.

"A dapper uniform tends to increase an official's self-confidence," Senor Valle said. "It also is likely to keep the wearer out of gambling dens and saloons, for he does not wish to shame his uniform. Finally, an official-looking suit increases the respect of the public for law and order and for the man that is delegated to enforce it."

"Yes, I am a believer in the 'psicologia del traje'—the psychology of dress."

FINDS KIDNAPPED BOY IN UNITED STATES ARMY

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 13.—Mrs. Maud McGill Ward, of Los Angeles, has just located in Moscow, Ida., the son whom, she said, was kidnapped from her seventeen years ago, when he was four years old.

She wept when she showed two pictures of the youth—one as he was when she had last seen him and the other showing him in the uniform of the United States army—but it was for joy she cried.

The son, Oro Johnston McGill, was wounded in battle during the great war and now is receiving vocational training at the University of Idaho, Moscow.

Their reunion was effected through relatives in Lowellville, O.

CLING TO BELIEFS

Few People Today Are Without Pet Superstitions.

Although Not Carried to Extremes That Have Marred the Pages of History in the Past, They Are Still With Us.

We constantly hear it said that "this is the twentieth century; superstition and all that sort of thing died out long ago." Yet there is hardly a person in the country without his pet belief—that misfortune follows stooping over a baby or spilling salt, or that a black cat brings good luck, for example. Hence, too, the universal practice of wearing muscats "for luck."

These, however, are not very serious beliefs, being merely personal fads. Superstition of a deeper rooted and more unpleasant type is still common in the more backward rural areas, however. Only a few weeks ago an old dame in the Fen country was boycotted by the whole countryside because she had the reputation of being a witch and of throwing spells over people's children, stock and crops. No one would go near her or let her have food or clothing, and she nearly starved to death.

The cold, legal atmosphere of the courts would be thought unfavorable to belief in witchcraft, and yet a farmer—by no means an ignorant man—stood up the other day in Norfolk court and informed the bench that someone had bewitched his cows. He cured the evil spell by thrusting a red hot poker into his churn, when the evil spirit vanished in a bright flame.

Years ago any old crone who was cross grained with the neighbors stood a good chance of being tried (and burnt) for witchcraft, and cases are even known where animals were solemnly brought into court and tried on a similar charge.

A tough old cock at Basle, in Switzerland, was accused of laying eggs—a most serious offense, as such eggs were used only for making witches' ointment. The unhappy bird was haled before the justices, and one of the eggs produced as proof of guilt. In the face of such evidence the rooster's case was hopeless. He was convicted and he and his miraculous eggs solemnly burnt at the stake in the town square.

A sow and six young pigs were accused of witchcraft towards a child, and were brought, protesting loudly before the "beak." Amid great sensation, the sow was found guilty and publicly executed, but the porkers were acquitted on the ground of extreme youth. As late as 1740, a cow was accused of possessing a "devil," and after a long hearing, was found guilty and condemned to death. "Rats and mice and such small deer," have been summoned on numerous occasions, but almost invariably failed to put in an appearance at court.

In the fifteenth century, the peasants of a village in the south of France took legal proceedings against a plague of locusts which trespassed on their fields and devoured their crops. As the case was still being fought nearly half a century later, the modern gardener can sympathize with the unlucky plaintiffs, but would probably prefer the more up-to-date application of lime or mustard.

Another action was brought against a pest of leeches swarming in the ponds and streams of another country district of France. The judge issued a decree against the leeches trespassing further on the disputed territories, but history is silent as to whether the injunction was obeyed or ignored, with resultant punishment for contempt of court.

Animals have even been admitted as witnesses in the courts. It used to be considered no offense to kill a burglar trying to break into a house. There arose the difficulty that one man living alone might ask another to his house, and then murder him, pretending that he was a robber. To get over this, it was decided that any domestic animal, such as a cat or a dog, present at the time, might bear witness. If the animal on being questioned, satisfied the court that his master had acted in good faith, the killing was held to be justified. There are not many instances of acquittal.

Japanese Glass Industry Grows. Though encouraged by the government in 1876 by the establishment of a model glass factory, transferred ten years later to private ownership, the glass industry of Japan was only fairly prosperous until the outbreak of the recent European war, at which time, due to the shutting off of supplies from France, Belgium and Germany, the manufacture of glass received such a stimulus that it now bids fair to compete with the industry in other countries. Before 1914 practically all the window glass used in Japan was imported, but this branch of the industry is receiving special attention and in 1918 its product to the value of $1,756,000 was exported.

Conductor Pulls Teeth. A conductor-dentist operates on a branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad system in West Virginia. He is Dr. Harry Halstead. When patients failed to come to him fast enough Halstead took a position as conductor. He carries forceps in his pocket. During a recent week the train was halted four times by persons who wanted teeth drawn. The dentist-conductor never fails to make the stops.
