POLITICIANS STONE
NEWSPAPER OFFICES.

BUENOS AIRES, Jan. 26. (By Mail).—Police guards have been stationed to protect the offices of newspapers here against violent manifestations of political partisans during the present political campaign for the election of members of the House of Deputies. The office of one newspaper recently was stoned by paraders from a political meeting and in smaller cities there have been several attacks upon newspapers. In two of these cases the offices were wrecked.

BUDGET SYSTEM TO REORGANIZE GOVERNMENT

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Adoption by Congress of an executive budget system is expected by many to lead to the reorganization of the executive branch of the government so as to include the addition of at least one, and probably more, new administrative departments, presided over by cabinet officers. The immediate extent of this reorganization will depend largely upon whether Congress adopts the budget plan contained in the Good bill, passed last October by the House, or the plan contained in the McCormick bill upon which the Senate select committee on the budget has just concluded its hearings.

Under the Good plan no new department would be created in the executive branch of the government and none is in view, although if the Good bill becomes a law there would be created in the executive branch of the government a new independent bureau. This would be known as the bureau of the budget and would be located in the office of the President. The Good bill also proposes an independent auditing and accounting department, but in no way responsible to the executive branch of the government. Representative Good having in view an organization of accountants and other experts responsible solely to Congress and free of criticism from the executive branch.

The Senate bill, sponsored by Senator Medill McCormick, also does not create any new executive departments. The proper execution of the McCormick plan, however, will depend largely, in the opinion of experts on budgetary procedure, upon a thorough reorganization of the executive branch of the government so as to lead to the establishment of at least one new executive department presided over by a cabinet officer. This would be known as the department of public works.

That large spending committees of the House at least are convinced of the urgent need for heavy reductions in annual federal expenditures was indicated when the annual river and harbor appropriation bill was placed on the calendar for the consideration by the committee of the whole. Estimates transmitted to Congress requested the appropriation of more than $42,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1921 for internal waterways and harbor improvements. The House committee on rivers and harbors has reported out a bill carrying only $12,000,000, representing a cut of about 71 per cent. The bill reported allowed only $7,000,000 of its total for expenditure upon existing projects and the remainder for the maintenance of already completed projects, thereby not allowing a cent of money for any new projects. It seems doubtful that it will be substantially added to by the House before it is finally passed and sent to the Senate.

The Senate budget plan, as contained in the McCormick bill, specifically provided that the secretary of the treasury, whom the McCormick bill makes responsible for the preparation of the budget, shall not have any power to revise the estimates of expenditure for river and harbor improvements. Section 13 of the bill says that the secretary of war shall annually submit the budget estimates referring to these improvements to the secretary of the treasury, "to be incorporated by him, without change, into the budget which he submits to the President."

Witnesses before the Senate select committee on the budget criticized this provision. River and harbor improvements have cost the country hundreds of millions of dollars and the money spent has shown little or no beneficial results. The "log-rolling" method of getting large sums from the public purse to be spent in congressional districts has long been manifest in the rivers and harbors bill, among a few others.

Senator McCormick stated that the reason he excluded estimates of expenditures for river and harbor improvements from the secretary of the treasury's power to revise departmental estimates, proposed in his bill, was because "they are now sort of a lost child in the war department," intimating that he believes the rivers and harbors of the country should be under the direct supervision of an individual department. A department of public works was recommended by Thomas R. Lill, of New York, when he testified before the Senate select committee on the budget. He also recommended a department of education and a department of public health. Mr. Lill a few years ago reorganized the Mexican financial system.

Ogden L. Mills of New York recommended, when he appeared before the Senate select committee on the budget, that a department of administration, presided over by a cabinet officer, be established. He deferred to the views of Senator McCormick, however, that such a department would hardly be necessary if the secretary of the treasury is made a true fiscal officer, as his bill proposes, given the machinery with which to adequately prepare the nation's annual financial program.

The keynote of what an executive budget system would mean to the organization of the executive branch of the government was sounded during the hearings of the House select committee on the budget last September. Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt said, in endorsing the adoption of the system, that he looked to it as "the opening wedge" that would eventually bring about a reorganization of the executive branch. Later developments have revealed to the exponents of a budget system that this reorganization will not alone include the co-ordination of the executive establishments but also perhaps the institution of at least one new executive department to supervise the country's rivers and harbors, public buildings and grounds, and all other public works.

BRITONS WANT U.S. DRYS TO KEEP HANDS OFF

LONDON, Feb. 2. (By Mail).—Viscount Grey of Falloden told the American Rhodes scholars who crossed the ocean as fellow passengers with him on the Adriatic on his return from his post as Ambassador to Washington that he hoped in time British scholars would go to American and Canadian universities as they were going to Oxford.

"I believe the more association of this kind there is the more the countries will find points of agreement with each other," he declared. "You belong to the generation," which is going to do the intellectual work and shape the thought and policy of the United States and Canada in the coming years. You will meet at Oxford some of those who are going to do the same for Great Britain. If you form some such friendships with British undergraduates and they with you, they will do something to help the countries on each side of the Atlantic to understand each other, to keep in touch and to like each other. It was the idea of Cecil Rhodes that they should work together. This he believed to be for their own interest and for that of the world. Many of us think that is true and believe that the thing most necessary is for the leading minds of each country to become acquainted with those of the others."

Anyway, they can't blame Charles W. Murphy, former boss of the Cubs, for the many baseball squabbles now being aired in the big leagues.

WILL GROW COTTON.

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 6. (By Mail).—American capitalists are reported to be planning for the development of cotton growing in the Laguna district in the State of Coahuila. This district has grown large crops of cotton for many years. It is understood also that the Americans will plant thousands of acres in Tamaulipas to wheat. The government is said to look with favor on these projects.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

NOBODY CAN TELL WHEN YOU DARKEN GRAY, FADED HAIR WITH SAGE TEA

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful.
