SOCIETY

down a real position, bedecked in a voluminous white gown, with a white cap cocked jauntily atop his head and direct with lordly mien the golgs and comings of a host of kitchen satellites is beyond this scribe—but hear the story.

Mr. Burke has a worthy emulator in his nephew, Oliver Williams, who under his tutelage is likely yet to become a credit to the family and make Chef Victor look like a frayed two-spot in a clean deck—but again we digress.

The banker and Oliver at present are alone in Mr. Burke's handsome new home on Third street, Mrs. Burke being absent on an elaborate visit. Free from the restraining feminine influence, the two gay blades last Sunday conceived the idea that it would be the proper thing to give a dinner in honor of the two recent brides of the family, Mr. Burke's daughter, Mrs. Louis Hoagland, and daughter-in-law, Mrs. Percy Burke, and their husbands.

So they scattered some exquisite napery over the hospitable board, spread thereon all the silverware they could find in the house—and, strange to say, for all anyone can bear witness to the contrary, they got each knife, fork and spoon of the full course array in its proper place—and that is art.

Then they proceeded to plunk a steak for the middle course and worked backward and forward from that point, until all the real recipes in the cookbook were exhausted. The soup was all that a soup should be, the salad was a dream, well, from soup to nuts that dinner was a startling success, especially the dessert. Passing lightly over the other courses, let's dwell a moment on the dessert.

When the guests arrived they found the hosts in the kitchen putting the second story on some remarkably nice-appearing pies. Chef Burke and his youthful conditor were deeply engrossed in smearing meringue over the top of the pastry, but paused to greet the company.

"Yeah," says the nephew, "everything turned out pretty well. Now these pies may be a little off on the top dressing, but they're prime underneath."

"Tip-top, tip-top," responded the elder schemer. "Never did a better job on a pie in my life."

But murder will out, and though they've never confessed, it's whispered that the rogues had heard of the fame of Ross Nickerson's pies—and they are good pies. The gooeying up of the top of them was a deep-laid plan, and not so much intended to put something over the surface of the pies as to put something over on the guests.

It's a culinary conquest, however, as every housewife knows, to make a palatable meringue, and the glory of their triumph is not lessened in the eyes of their friends. The dinner was a notable achievement.

At the home of the bride at Macdoel, Cal., Saturday evening, February 14, Miss Dollie Rachel Brumble and Wilbur Nine were united in marriage by the Rev. W. F. Nine, father of the bridegroom. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a small gathering of relatives and friends.

The bridegroom's brother, Dennis Nine of Sacramento, was his attendant and the bride's sister, Miss Gertrude Brumble, was maid of honor. Following the ceremony a wedding supper was served. The newly-wedded couple left on the day after the wedding for Meadow Lake, where they will make their home at the sawmill plant there.

Marion Nine and Preston Nine, well-known operators of this city and Swan Lake, brothers of the bridegroom, and Mrs. Marion Nine were among the wedding guests.
