G.O.P. United--Democrats Split

BY SCOTT C. BONE.

Republican National Convention--Chicago, June 8.
Democratic National Convention--San Francisco, June 28.

Thus have the two great parties made preliminary arrangements for the quadrennial political contest of 1920.

Only in the ease with which they reached decisions as to the places and dates of holding the conventions did the initial proceedings of the two National Committee meetings resemble each other in the least. In all other respects they were wholly at variance.

Unity, Confidence and Unafraidness marked the Republican National Committee meeting at Washington on December 10-11. Its sessions were animated by a spirit of party enthusiasm, determination and loyalty, and an entire absence of party factionalism, which at once bespoke and foretold the winning of the battle of good government soon to come. By common expression and assent this gathering was pronounced the most successful of the kind held in a quarter of a century. And it was rendered all the more significant by the fact that political precedent and tradition were disregarded in not waiting upon the party in power to lead off with its campaign plans.

Discord, Third-Term Fear, White House Domination and an Open Breach signalized the Democratic National Committee meeting and the Jackson Day celebration at Washington on January 8. An announcement by Woodrow Wilson that he would not be a candidate for re-election--expected, hopefully, prayerfully awaited by the assembled hosts--did not come. Instead, a message reached the party faithful, condemning the United States Senate for daring to exercise its treaty-making functions and virtually commanding that the Versailles treaty, with the proposed League of Nations covenant, as brought back from Paris by the President, be submitted to referendum and made the paramount issue in the impending campaign--an issue upon which he would nationally become the one and only logical Democratic candidate.

Again was exemplified "The State, I Am."
To this White House edict or decree the once Peerless Leader, William Jennings Bryan, who, thanks to the operation of the two-thirds rule in the Baltimore convention of 1912, contrived to name the party's present standard bearer, gave a thunderous rejoinder of No. He enjoined upon the Democrats at the banquet tables the urgent, imperative, inescapable duty of a compromise on the treaty, by way of reservations and its ratification without further unnecessary delay. And to the Nebraskaan's thunderous No many of those present, secretly or openly, uttered a fervent Amen.

So the Democratic gathering at Washington produced rival leaders and made manifest a party split. Shall the leader be Woodrow Wilson or William Jennings Bryan? Is the Democratic party to pass and give place to a Wilsonian party? These are questions which the Jackson Day dinner evolved and left unanswered.

A State's Rights issue, involving Old Sumptuary, has also developed to add to the troubles of the Democratic party. The New York World, foremost Democratic organ and pro-Wilson in all things, demands that the party go on record in denunciation of national prohibition and pledge its efforts to nullify the constitutional amendment. Failing to do this, the World bluntly declares that the Democratic party is eternally and forever damned. The President's veto of the prohibition enforcement act gives the anti high hopes that this State's Right issue will prevail.

Meanwhile, the Republican party, harmonious and solidified as it has not been since the Roosevelt campaign of 1904, is confidently looking ahead and going ahead.

ROSEBURG PAPERS ARE CONSOLIDATED

ROSEBURG, Ore., Mar. 29.—The Evening News and the Roseburg Evening Review have completed details for consolidation, effective April 1. The united publications will appear as the Roseburg News-Review.

Application for incorporation papers were filed at Salem last week by B. W. Bates of the News, Lee Wimberly of the Review and Bert G. Bates, the capitalization of the firm being placed at $30,000. The linotypes, presses and all machinery composing the Review plant will be moved to the building now occupied by the News, and additional floor space secured in adjoining quarters.

Lee Wimberly has been identified with the Roseburg Review for 30 years, and B. W. Bates, who established the Evening News here more than 10 years ago, has followed newspaper work and the printing business for more than 20 years in this city.

The business management of the Roseburg News-Review will be administered jointly by B. W. Bates and Lee Wimberly.

Bert G. Bates, the junior member of the firm, has been brought up in a print shop and when war was declared left his position as city editor for the News, enlisting in the army and was later sent overseas. On his return he again took up his newspaper work. The amalgamation appears to be meeting with favor among the merchants and general public here.
