AT THE THEATERS

What is perhaps the most awe-inspiring scenery ever recorded by the motion picture camera is seen in "Blind Husbands," the Universal photodrama of the Tyrolean Alps, which comes on Sunday to the Liberty Theatre.

The photodrama stars Eric Strohm, formerly of the Austrian army, in the role that will add to the hatred aroused by his part of the British Hun officer in "The Heart of Humanity."

Through suave mock courtesy and strictest attention to her smallest wants he breaks down the barrier of her reserve and leads her into a mild flirtation.

Falling to ruin the life of a beautiful American girl, although he nearly accomplishes his vile purpose von Steubing directs his attention to the humble girls of the Alpine village and brands their simple souls with his hot passion.

His downfall comes when he touches his puny strength against the might of the eternal mountains. "Blind Husbands" presents a never-to-be-forgotten contrast of the quiet majesty of the mountains with the baseness of human desires.

It will be shown at the Liberty Theatre on Sunday only.
