SUBMARINES LOSE MANY OF TERRORS

LONDON, May 3.—Submarines have lost two-thirds of their efficiency since 1914, according to Lieutenant W. S. King-Hall, R. N., in a recent address at the Royal United Service institute on "The Submarine and Future Naval Warfare."

The speaker maintained that the advantage previously possessed by the submarine was steadily on the wane. Whereas, at the beginning of the war in 1914 it was as 9 to 1 against the surface ship, it was only 7 to 3 in 1919 and was likely to be only 6 to 7 in 1930. He was of the opinion that within the next few years there would be a great development of submarine detecting apparatus which would give large and important ships a certain measure of protection against tactical attack by submarines.

He regarded as impracticable the proposal that battleships should be made submersible. He ventured the opinion that the use of gas might eventually revolutionize naval warfare much as gunpowder did when first introduced. It might be discharged with deadly effect on an enemy coastline. It was actually suggested during the German occupancy that the Belgian coast should be "gassed" but the plan was abandoned "in deference to Belgium's susceptibilities."
