

A Guaranteed Liver Treatment

The function of the liver is to filter the waste-products-poisons from the blood and to produce bile, the fluid which aids digestion in the small intestine, and which is also a natural purgative.

If the liver slows down in its work, the entire system suffers—we have sour or sick stomach, headache, indigestion, a constipation.

REXALL LIVER SALTS

POT POURRI

By LONE STAR

We asked Fred English the other day what the difference between lightning and electricity was, and what do you think Freddie told us? Listen:—"You don't have to pay nothin' for lightning."

Mr. Gray, in his "Elegy in a country churchyard" says something about gems of purest ray serene, the dark unfathomed caves of ocean bearing. That noted writer also added that "Full many a flower is born to bloom unseen, and waste its fragrance on the desert air." That might be the case with the Lone Star. At any rate, we feel a little poetical this evening, so with your kind permission, we will unload ourselves on you. Here goes:—
When spring's at hand and airs grow warm
And hazy lazy days befall
There's something mystic in the call
Of engines, whistling as they near
The crossing—like a distant charm
It seems to say: "Let's go away from here."

How's that folks? Well wait till you hear it fall.

Go where? Why, south or east or west.

What matter whither, so we go? Just leave the place that we know
The daily round, so pale, so stale
See countries new—or peer at least
Beyond the dim horizon veil.

That's better still folks. Durn me if it ain't. But there's more to come yet, so listen.

Whence comes the call, the mystic spell?

Why, that's the first thing our life teaches—
To search, to seek, to travel wide;
Se what's behind the distant reaches
Our ears are closed, our feet are tied
By long convention; so we hear
The summons, faintly clear,
But will not follow to the call.

That's what we call "some pome" for an amateur.

So the local Standard Oil branch is improving the service we see. What's the use of that we can't buy gas?

Did you ever hear the story of the Jew who took his son Ikey into a restaurant with him for dinner. Soup was the first course served, and it happened that a fly had gotten into Ikey's soup. "Oh, fader—look!" said the Jewette, "there's a fly in my soup." "Hush Shon" said the old Jew, "eat the soup till you get to the bottom of the dish, and then we'll call the waiter, unt he vill gif you anoder powl free of cost, mitout sharhing you."

The meanest man in the world though, is the man who eats soup all the time to keep from wearing out his teeth.

Pat and Mike were crossing a river on a ferry, and in the river was a mud dredger. Pat stood there for a while watching the big scoop dig down and then come up full of mud. Turning to Mike he said, "Mike—would ye loike to be working over there on that mud digger?"

"Sure and I would Pat. But O'd hate loike the very divvle to be thim guys down underneath whot's a-shovellin' the mud into that big schoop."

That's almost as good as the story fo the priest who ran into an Irish man eating a mess of sausage on a Friday.

"Timm Doolan" quote the priest, "is't on a blessed Friday that ye'd lose yer soul fer a dish o' mate?"

"Taint mate yer Riverince—its sossidge."

"It's mate" said the priest, "and ye'll do pinnace."

"A loight wan thin father plase."

"Ye'll bring a load o' wood to me house ter-morrer."

The next morning, as the priest stepped from the house, he discovered Tim tipping a load of sawdust into his basement.

"Timothy—phwat is all this?"

"It's the pinnance sure" said Tim.

"But O! said wood. That's not wood."

"Well" said Tim "if sossidge is mate, then that's wood."

An Irishman was recently haled before a court somewhere south of the Mason-Dixon line, and it was, strange to say, a new experience for him. However, that did not seem to "phase" Pat who made up his mind not to get the worst of it.

"Prisoner at the bar" called the clerk. "Do you wish to challenge any of the jury?"

"Well, I'll tell ye" said Pat, "I'm not exactly in training, but I think I could pull off a round or two with that old fat boy over there in the corner."

Pat and Mike, who were neighbors in the old country, happened to disappear from public gaze at about the same time. Pat had stolen a watch from a blind man, while Mike mistook someone's cow for his own and sold it. As luck would have it they were both drafted to the same prison, and at church parade on Sunday morning they had a chance for a moment's talk.

Said Mike "top av the mornin' to ye Pat, and phwat might the toime be? Sure and tis you that knows all about watches."

But he couldn't get ahead of Pat, who replied: "Mike, ma lad, sure an' it's just about milkin' time."

Theat reminds us of the following conversation which we heard outside a local hospital the other morning.

"Well, young man, I'll soon have you on your feet again."

"You're right Doctor, I'll have to sell my car to pay your bill."
