POI GOING UP

HILO, Island of Hawaii, T. H., May 21. (By Mail.)—Poi, the staple Hawaiian food soon will advance in price, according to Supervisor James Ako of the North Kona district. Ako said that the enforcement of board of health regulations recently promulgated would put a number of Poi factories out of business. Added to this, said Ako, the tar crop, from the roots of which Poi is made, is short, owing to the dry season and other causes.

POT POURRI

By LONE STAR

We were coming over from England some time ago, and the steward on the vessel was quite a physician. Did you say "How can a steward be quite a physician?" Well—he attended all the berths, that's how.

Lone Star went into the local post-office the other day and found a returned letter in his box. Not understanding it he went to Delzell and asked why the letter had not been sent. "Oh, it's too heavy," returned the worthy postmaster. "It needs another stamp." "Well," but we replied, "that will make it heavier yet"—and we are still unable to see just why a letter that is already too heavy needs another stamp on it.

Perhaps our friend from the antediluvian period can tell us.

A friend of ours remarked some time ago that men who had anything in their heads generally found plenty to do with their hands. That's so. We saw a tramp the other day who evidently had something in his head—both his hands were busy.

A friend of ours remarked some who is continually nagging at her about her grammar. The well-intentioned mother has evidently overdone it, however, for after the last attack of the "flu" that the Lone Star had, she approached him on the street and said, "Did you enjoy much pain when you were ill?"

But say; wouldn't this be a glorious world if people only lived up to what's on their tombstones?

Dynamite Malone, the California-Oregon Power company's speed pellet got what was coming to him today. He was driving that Chevrolet of his from Keno at about 66 miles an hour when off came its hind leg. Fortunately, the speed pellet was uninjured, although if he had been, Lone Star would not have shed any tears, as he had occasion to ride behind him not long ago. And believe me folks, any man that can ride more than one block behind Major Malone and live to tell the story, is some man.

We have been called upon to risk our life more than once, but we have never before been bamboozled into taking what was supposed to be a pleasure ride, and then live in perfect terror all the way out and all the way back.

It's all right Dynamite, you'll get yours some day—mark my words.

But say, folks—do you know the reason the sun never sets on the British empire? No? Well, it's because God Almighty cannot trust an Englishman in the dark—that's why.

At the opening of the new dance pavilion the other evening, one of the new dances introduced was The African Gallop. And thereby hangs a tale.

Sometime—somewhere—in the dark and misty recesses of the past Brother Parker was obsessed with the idea that he was a natural born actor. In fact, to hear him talk one would think that Sidney Drew took lessons. Did you say "How can a steward be months of futile endeavor, Parker finally succeeded in getting on the stage, and, strange to say, was given the leading role in a play called "The African Gallop." Ask him about it.

Incidentally, it would have done you good to see Parker strutting 'round that dance hall the other night. Talk about easy money—it's the first easy money Parker ever saw and it sort of went to his head. Lone Star went up to his little bar, as in days of yore, to get himself a little drink. Usually Parker and myself are pretty good friends and it was easy to see that the young man was not normal by a long shot. Do you know what he did?

Well, listen—so flustered was this young man that when he asked him for an ice cream cone, he handed us out a corkscrew. So you can imagine that he was beside himself some.

However, the novelty of easy money soon dies away—and in time Parker will descend to earth again.

We received another spasm from our friend the "Knocker" the other day, but we were too wise for him. He can't get any free advertising here. But what excuse do you think he made for his bum spelling. Listen. He says that he knew it was rotten spelling, but that he didn't want to correct it with ink, as that would have given him away. Evidently he must think Lone Star is a dead one if a letter like that one was should get past him.

Now we'll tell you something else about that letter, and its wonderful spelling. We only pointed out to you two mistakes, when, as a matter of fact there were three. Our antediluvian friend of the pre-Christian era, spelt "christian" as follows;—"christiEn." How do you like that old top? That was a typographical error too no doubt—Suppose you saw that one too, didn't you?

In this second letter, this bird says that two of his virtues are—being able to spell correctly, and—grammar. Well—that might be so, but so far, all the evidence is to the contrary, and until we are given some proof of these virtues, we are bound to look upon them as very negative virtues.

And then, if these are two of his virtues, we wonder how many more he has. You remember the old story of "self-praise."

Just one more suggestion before we dismiss our virtuous friend from our mind, and consign his anonymous communication to the waste paper basket. It is this: Get another brand of envelopes before addressing any more communications to Lone Star—the first ones gave you away.

WAR INSURANCE WEAKNESS LACK OF SOLICITORS

NEW YORK, June 5.—Combination of the work of the vocational training board and the war risk insurance bureau was recommended in a report made public today by a sub-committee on war risk insurance of the Republican national committee's advisory committee on policies and platform. The report has been adopted by the executive committee of the advisory committee and will be submitted to the platform committee of the Republican convention to be held in Chicago.

The sub-committee of which Frederick Frelinghuysen of New Jersey, is chairman, reviewed criticisms of the service rendered to soldiers by the war risk insurance bureau and said that the bureau had not been equal to the task of keeping in touch with the soldiers after they were demobilized, with the result that 73 per cent of their insurance lapsed.

The committee recommended that work affecting the former service men should be co-ordinated and the responsibility placed under one active directing head; that the former soldiers holding converted policies be permitted to name any beneficiary and use their insurance as collateral; that policies be issued promptly and branch offices established to collect premiums through local postoffices.

The committee reported that over 100,000 men have converted their insurance for over $400,000,000 and that many more must do so but that "no policies have yet been issued although policies were approved over one year ago and this had led to considerable friction." The committee stated that the "weakness in government insurance" lay in the fact that insurance could not be successful without active solicitation and the government was in no position to do this. It stated that there has been "very little delay" in settling claims of soldiers aggregating over $1,000,000,000 of insurance.
