PATIENTS LIKE MUSIC

GALLIPOLIS, Ohio, June 9.—Patients at the Ohio hospital for Epileptics here are jazz music fans. The music not only furnishes entertainment for the unfortunates, but aids in relieving their suffering, says Dr. G. G. Kinison, superintendent.

Scattered throughout the cottages in which the patients are housed, are 12 pianos, 35 phonographs and more than a hundred string and wind instruments.

The patients are particularly fond of band music, especially that rendered by the patients' hands.

At the weekly dances, jazz music is played for hours.

INVESTORS NOT WORRIED OVER
BOND MARKET

(From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat)

A story from New York says: "The drastic decline in Liberty Bonds has caused a loss to the investment public of more than $2,500,000,000 on a total of $22,000,000,000 purchased." This is a theoretical fact, but an actual untruth. There has been no such loss. In fact, there has been no loss at all to any bond investor who has kept his bonds. Only those who have sold them have suffered losses, and that does not include even half the bond holders. It would not include more than the small per cent forced to sell in order to get badly needed money if wrong impressions like the above were not abroad.

If every bond bought by the American people were put on the market today at present prices, the loss would not be the sum stated above. But every bond is not on the market, therefore the above statement of loss is untrue. To the investor Liberty Bonds are worth today every cent paid for them. They will be paid in full at maturity and in the meantime the full interest will be paid regularly twice a year. That is what the government promised and that is what it is doing and will do. Every purchaser of a Liberty Bond who bought it with the intention of keeping it as an investment and is so keeping it has not been hurt a dollar by the decline in the market price. This fact cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of bondholders who may be led to believe that their bonds as a permanent investment are not as good as when they bought them and thus rush them to the market for sale. To do that would not only be to sacrifice goodlessly a part of their value, but it would tend to depress the market to still lower points.

Secretary Houston has called attention to this fact that no bondholder who is holding his bonds is suffering from the low market price, that full interest is paid regardless of the market value and that the bonds themselves will be paid in full at maturity, with the best security of the world back of them, that of the whole American people. He also calls attention to the fine investment bonds present at present market prices. One who buys bonds at present rates not only draws full interest regularly, but at maturity will receive as profit the difference between par and the price he paid. Large investors are taking up the bonds because of their belief in these stories of the great losses they have already met by the decline in the market price and possibly greater losses if they continue to hold them. No bond owner who holds his bonds is losing a cent. All the loss is suffered by those who sell them.

ASSAULT CASE IN COURT

Guy Brown, accused by J. W. Perdue of assault with intent to kill, had a hearing before Justice N. J. Chapman this morning. Action in the case was deferred pending Brown's future behavior. He said he was going to California at once if the action were not pressed and the district attorney consented to let the charge lie in abeyance for the time being.

The charge is the result of a street encounter one night last week. Perdue got the best of a fist encounter, after which it is alleged Brown drew a gun.

AT THE THEATERS

Whenever a startling effect is produced in a motion picture, there is always someone who will nudge you and whisper confidentially:

"That's faked. I know how it's done. A friend of mine in the business."

Donald Crisp has given these wise-actors something to scratch their heads over in "Why Smith Left Home," showing at the Star Theatre Wednesday. The climax of the action is an earthquake, and the camera shows not the results of the disturbance, as is usually the case, but the actual quake working in full blast. Chimneys and huge trees fall, an automobile is wrecked, whole houses collapse, and scores flee in terror.
