A DESERVING EFFORT

Over at the corner of Seventh and Pine streets, on the pavilion, is being carried on a work that, in the hurry and bustle of this busy little city, is being overlooked by many. It is the revival services that are being conducted by Rev. C. F. Trimble, under the auspices of the protestant churches of the city. It is an earnest work and one that should receive the cordial support of the people of the city. The time is at hand in Klamath Falls when we must pause in our mad chase after the almighty dollar and take stock of the higher ideals of the community and ask ourselves what we have done and what we are doing towards maintaining these ideals and perpetuating them. More and more are we delegating to the preachers of the gospel the salvation of our souls, until a sort of spiritual indifference has taken hold of us and we are delivering ourselves body and soul to the mammons of iniquity and greed.

That is why we say that the work that is being carried on by the Rev. Mr. Trimble should have the support of the community, for this city is in need of it. That support should not be passive. It should be of such a character as will fill to overflowing the pavilion and give to the movement he is trying to inaugurate an impetus that will carry it to success. Klamath Falls is in need of a revival, one that will bring uppermost the good that is in the city that it may triumph over the serpentine influence that seems to be gripping the municipality. Let us join with Mr. Trimble and the other clergymen of the city in doing what we can to add strength to the movement, in the hope that it may lead to a higher code of civic righteousness.

NEIGHBORLY COURTESY

Common courtesy, civic pride or action by the police to enforce the existing ordinance should be sufficient to remedy a condition that is all too common in Klamath Falls and which results almost daily in an outraged roar from one or another property owner who is attempting to beautify the little piece of God's footstool he calls home, only to see his plans and perspiration go for naught before the onslaught of neighborhood livestock.

It's no fun to toil for days on a few square feet of lawn, get the seed planted, the ground rolled and find it all torn up by some neighbor's hons or smashed down by the hoofs of a neighbor's cow.

Not from one part of town but from all parts come complaints of this sort of nuisance. Peculiar as it may seem, persons who are undoubtedly above stealing clothes of their neighbor's line or kindling from his wood shed, will not hesitate to let their pet livestock despoil a garden or lawn that has cost hours of hard labor. We discern a distinction but fail to see any difference in the larcenous effect—save that the destruction of the growing things is a graver offense, in that often the loss cannot be replaced or remedied—at least until another growing season.

In this era of low production and high cost, every egg and broiler, every pint of milk helps to restore the normal equilibrium. We'd hesitate to urge the banishment entirely of either cows or chickens beyond the city limits, but citizens who are seeking to cut down living cost with a back yard garden, or who devote all of their ground to flowers and blue grass, also have rights.

These rights are recognized in the city's ordinances, prescribing that chickens, etc. kept within the city limits, must be penned up. But to make an ordinance effective it must be enforced and that seems too much to ask from an overworked police force.

Most modern cities limit the site for a barn or chicken pen to within one hundred feet of a dwelling—Which practically bars livestock from all residential districts. Perhaps the city council, which hasn't turned down one of ten suggestions for ordinances offered in the last year—wise or woody, all alike—might try to modernize Klamath Falls to this extent.

WANTED—

The city of Klamath Falls is a waitin' one at last? A speed cop fer roomin' houses. To see 'at they don't run too fast! —Sage Brush.

Guessing contest. A local weekly newspaper says that "a county officer was fined $5 for driving without a tail light."

Burleson says he' for McAdoo. Despite this handicap the crown prince may be nominated.

Barefoot Days

are here, so are Van Bellen's Kiddy Shoes

Your little one's feet need special care and attention in the Summer months. It's the season of steady play and exercise, and their little feet naturally are developing fast.

Let us help you in this duty—for it is a most important one—We have made children's feet and children's shoes a real study. We have made a specialty of fitting growing feet as nature demands—And the best proof of our success is the repeated "Next Shoes" orders from satisfied mothers.

Brown and Grey Barefoot Sandals, Children's and Ladies'. Also Play Oxfords and Dress Pumps in Black, White and Brown.

With a grip full of mint and a heart full of hope "Cap" Lee will leave tomorrow for San Francisco.

Perhaps, like the maiden coy, McAdoo says "no" but means "yes."

Laws and feelings alike are harrowed when neighbor's hens run loose.
