AT THE THEATERS

in "What Every Woman Learns," the picture at the Star Theatre, Enid Bennett is called upon to shoot her husband. In the past female stars have bungled such scenes badly. Though they know the cartridge in the gun is a blank and they are trained to go through the most harrowing scenes with no thought of themselves, still there is something about the blue steel muzzle of a revolver with its business end pointed at a man's heart and the startling bark when the weapon goes off that unnerves them.

No such things mar the action when Enid Bennett is doing the shooting. She handles the gun with the expertness of an Annie Oakley. The chief reason is that this dainty little star is a native of Australia, spent the early years of her life in the unsettled "bush" district of that continent, and shooting was as much a part of her education as the three R's. Indeed, it is Miss Bennett's concern lest she go through the screen shooting with too business-like an air and thus seem out of character.

Salem, June 29.—Simon Benson of Portland and E. E. Kiddle of La Grande, members of the state highway commission, left on an inspection tour of the Pacific highway, south as far as Ashland. They were accompanied from here by Herbert Nunn, state engineer, and will be joined at Eugene by R. A. Booth.

the dangerous return, and the many other vicissitudes which beset the expedition.

The world has become very much interested in the Shackleton expedition through the newspaper reports of it, and through Shackleton's reports of it, and through Shackleton's famous account of the voyage, called, "South" which has just appeared. In this large illustrated work the famous British explorer tells his own fascinating story of the expedition.

The Shackleton expedition left Buenos Ayres and did not return until two years later, when it reached Valparaiso, Chile. Every important detail of the trip was put into the five reels of pictures which compose "The Bottom of the World," the official screen record of the trip.
