SHAKING THE SHIMMY ON THE RIFLE RANGE

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2.—Twelve bold Yankees will be shaking the shimmy with a vengeance on the Beverloo rifle range, close by to Antwerp, Belgium, when the Olympic rifle match begins on July 22. When the rules governing the match were received at Quantico, Va., where the competition for the American team was held on the marine corps rifle range, the Yankee shots found themselves facing a unique target at 300 and 600 meter distances. The bull's eye contained an inner bull, with a scoring value of six instead of the conventional five. How to signal the value of a six was the problem. Major Daulty Smith of the marines, the American team coach, solved the problem. The scoring disk which showed white on one side for a five, and red on the other for a four, was shown first white and then red. "Shaking the shimmy" was the range nickname that was promptly agreed on by the nine army, four marine corps, two navy and two civilians who made the team. So they'll be "shaking the shimmy" in Belgium with great frequency to the music of rifle shots.

FROM FARM BOY TO PRESIDENT

Uncle Ted's Bed-Time Stories
"You know you promised to tell us all about Senator Harding last week," teased Jack as he tugged at his uncle's coat.

"That's true, Jack. All right, I'll tell you all I can but there are so many things to tell about Mr. Harding that I can't possibly tell them all tonight. Now sit real quiet and don't ask too many questions."

"Warren G. Harding was born on his grandfather's farm, not far from the little village of Blooming Grove, Morrow county, Ohio, on the second day of November, 1865. There were eight children in the family and Senator Harding was the oldest. His father, George T. Harding, was the village doctor in those days and is still practicing medicine in the city of Marion, Ohio, the present home of the senator. The original Harding family came from Scotland, and settled first in Connecticut and later moved to Wyoming valley, Pennsylvania, where many of them fought in the Revolutionary war. Warren's mother, for he was Warren, Jack, just as you are Jack today, was Phoebe Dickerson, descended from the Van Kirks, an old Holland Dutch family. So you see our next President has the strong blood of the Holland Dutch on one side and the fearless, alert, and liberty-loving Scotch blood on the other.

"As Warren grew up on his grandfather's farm he had to learn to cut down trees, chop wood, split rails, plant and hoe corn and all those things that had to be done when to raise crops meant raising them between the roots and stumps of trees. Everything was done by hand for there was no expensive farm machinery. Your father knows, Jack, what hard work it was in those days."

"Didn't he ever play?" asked Ruth.

"You bet he did, Ruth. He was a healthy, big boy and like all healthy boys he enjoyed the sports of the country and village. He loved the old and no boy could dive deeper or swim farther than Warren. He had a sunny disposition and was the real leader of the gang of his schoolmates. When he was 16 he looked like a man and had the strength of a man and there was no older boy who dared bully him. And he always protected the younger boys. Up until he was 14 years old he went to the village school, and then he entered the Ohio Central college of Iberia. He graduated high in scholarship. It was while there that he showed a talent for newspaper work, for he was made editor of the college paper. But the boys in those days couldn't afford to go right through college. He had to stop for a time now and then to earn enough money to go ahead and finish. During these times he worked at many things. He painted his neighbors' barns, cut corn, and drove a team to grade the roadbed of a railroad. He taught school when he was 17 and played a horn in the village brass band.

"But after he had a try at many things he still longed to be a newspaper man, and at odd times he worked in the little printing office. He learned to set type by hand and later run a linotype machine, which is used today in setting one line of newspaper type at once. In fact he learned from the ground up everything there was to know about a newspaper and to this day he carries in his pocket a 'luck piece' which is nothing more or less than the old printer's rule he used years ago when he was setting type.

"All of Senator Harding's newspaper ambitions were realized, for he finally became the owner and publisher of the Marion, Ohio, 'Star'. The 'Star' is his pet. When Warren was 19 his father moved to Marion, where the 'Star' was a struggling daily paper in a town of about 4,000 people. Warren could think of nothing else but that he wanted to own that paper. His father finally helped him take it over and then followed months and months of struggle and hard work to keep it going. At times he had to do everything from setting the type of writing the news and

MARK BOUNDARIES IN MINING FIELD

VANCOUVER, B. C., July 2.—So that miners flocking to the new silver strikes in the Portland Canal country may know at all times on which side of the boundary they are prospecting, boundary lines between Canada and Alaska are to be clearly defined this summer.

Several Canadian government engineers were here recently on their way from Ottawa to Prince Rupert, where they will start north working along the line. They will proceed northward until they meet a party of American government engineers who are to work south from the Ugak river, 100 miles north of Prince Rupert. A boundary trail cut 15 years ago along the boundary will be cleared and cairns and monuments will be erected.

printing the paper on a press that had to be turned by hand. But that story is too long to tell tonight. The result of his hard work has been that the 'Star' today is a big money-making plant and could not be bought for any price. There are more than 30,000 people in Marion today and the 'Star' has a larger circulation than any other newspaper in a city of that size in the middle west.

"I will tell you something that happened in the office of that paper one New Year's morning that shows the character of our next president. A friend entered the office and found the senator making up the form of the paper. 'A great senator you are,' said the visitor. 'I'd be a great senator if I didn't know anything else,' he replied. 'You see, this is a holiday, and we want to go to press as early as possible and let the boys get out and enjoy themselves; so I am just lending a helping hand.' And when they went upstairs to his office the press in the basement was heard to stop. Jumping up, Senator Harding rushed to the basement, found the trouble that had stopped the press, repaired it and the wheels began to move again. That shows how he has mastered the details of everything he goes into. No matter what it is, he is not content until he knows all about it. It was the same way with his first automobile. He would not rest until he could make all the repairs needed on the road and drive it as well as a chauffeur.

"Now kiddies, it's getting late and I can't tell you more tonight. Next week I will start where I have left off and tell you more about the life and work of our next president, Warren G. Harding."
