OLDEN ORATORS WERE LACONIC

CHICAGO, July 6.—The nomination oratory which marks the two great political conventions this year is in sharp contrast to the nominating speeches of the early days of the parties. This has been brought out afresh by inquiry at the Chicago Historical society and the Newberry library here.

In the first great Republican convention Abraham Lincoln was nominated for the first time, by Mr. Judd of Illinois, in these words:

"I desire on behalf of the delegation from Illinois to put in nomination as a candidate for president of the United States Abraham Lincoln of Illinois."

The first national nominating convention of the Democratic party was held 28 years earlier, in Baltimore, May 21-23, 1832. It was at this gathering that Andrew Jackson was endorsed for his second term. Jackson had been nominated previously in a number of states by the methods which were then passing away and according to the Newberry library it is doubtful if there was any speech at all placing him in nomination at the first Democratic national convention. The business of this convention was principally to nominate for the vice presidency.

The convention adopted a resolution concurring in Jackson's "repeated nominations." The resolution was drawn in 60 words.

Previous to that time (from 1800) to 1801 nominations for the presidency and vice presidency, the well known reference library says, were by congressional nominating caucus, consisting of party members of both houses of congress. The last congressional caucus was held in 1824, Jackson opposing the "king caucus" as it was termed, as undemocratic. In 1828 he was nominated by state legislative caucuses and conventions held in various states. Following this, popular state conventions grew up and out of them came the national conventions.

JACKSON FARM ORGAN OFF THE FREE LANT

The Jackson County Farm Bureau News has changed its former policy of sending free copies to all farm homes in Jackson county, and will hereafter send copies to paid subscribers only. The former practice was designed to acquaint the people generally with the aims and benefits of farm bureau activities. It has been discontinued for financial reasons. Subscription is a dollar a year, and carries with it membership in the farm bureau.

The Democratic city executive committee of Atlanta has decided to permit women to vote in the coming city primaries.

PICTURESQUE IN ITS INERTIA

Town of Cajamarca, in Andes Mountains, inhabited by People Seemingly Without Ambition.

The town of Cajamarca, nestled among the Andes mountains is, perhaps, the most unambitious community in the world, according to Harry A. Franck, who writes in the Wide World Magazine.

Cajamarca is very old, he says. The Spaniards found it when they conquered the country centuries ago, but nothing of the old Inca civilization remains, and the oldest buildings are the churches and the conquerors erected. Today, says Mr. Franck, the churches stand architecturally incomplete, not because time has demolished them but because, according to local tradition, a finished structure in colonial days had to pay tribute to the government, and so the builders economized by stopping work before the churches were finished.

It is a town where the upper class is distinguished by wearing collars and shoes and performing no manual labor, where the "lower class" is ragged and poverty-stricken, and where life goes on from year to year in a state of inertia which nobody seems to find undesirable. The unfinished churches give the old town a picturesque aspect, being built of stone and colored by the passage of time until they remind a traveler of the ancient Spanish edifices of Salamanca; nor is there any present likelihood that the town will grow rich enough to spoil their picturesque incompleteness by finishing them.

And not in a century, says the latest visitor from the outside world, has there been born in that town a "boy with the initiative and energy to tramp three days over the western range, and stow away for some place where he could make a man of himself."

JOHNSON NOT FIRST IN FIELD

Contrary to Wide Belief, There Was an English Dictionary Before He Compiled His.

The oldest English dictionary is not that by Doctor Johnson, as so many appear to think. There were many such lexicons before his day, and the earliest of them all was Dr. John William's "An Alphabetical Dictionary," appended to the author's "Essay Toward a Real Character and a Philosophical Language," published in 1658.

Everybody seems to know that the first printed London directory appeared in 1677, frequent notices in the press being accountable for much, but how many are aware that the art of living in London was first reduced to a science by Roger Crab, who in 1655 published a book, the first of its kind ever seen, in which he discourses at length on the scandalous extravagance of all who expended more than three farthings per week upon their food.

The earliest attempt to introduce phonetic spelling is afforded, so far as is known, by Butler's "Feminine Monarchy," first published at Oxford in 1690, and the "Polygraphia" of Trithemius, 1518, furnished the first attempt at secret writing.

The earliest collection of maps of England and Wales is found in the work of Christopher Saxton, which first saw the light in the days of Elizabeth. The maps number 35, and were published separately between 1578 and 1579, when a title and index were added and the whole series published in book form—Bookman's Journal and Print Collector.

Kinds of Stage Humor.

The French, who have an armory of critical terms both more exact and more abundant than ours, distinguish between three different kinds of stage humor. Brander Matthews writes in Munsey's. There is, first of all, the mere witicism, the sentence laughable in itself, the so-called "epigram," and this they term the "mot de esprit." Second, there is the phrase which derives its comic effect not from itself, but from its utterance at a given moment in the movement of the story; and this they term the "mot d'esprit," situation." Thirdly, there is the word or sentence whereby a character expresses himself unexpectedly and characteristically, unconsciously turning the flashlight on the unexplored recesses of his own soul; and they are wont to call this the "mot de caractere."

Ancient Love Filters.

In the Middle Ages people had recourse to love filters, magical incantations, prayers, fastings and the like, which were modified according to the country and the individual. A girl had only to agitate the water in a bucket of water with her hand; or to throw broken eggs over another person's head, if she wished to see the image of the man she should marry. If a bridal party met a monk on going to the church the union could not be happy. A priest, a dog, cat, lizard or serpent were equally unfortunate, while a spider, a toad or a wolf augured that all would go well. How the ring came to be used is not well known, as it did not occupy its present position in former times.—Chicago Journal.

Counterfeit Reason.

"Yes, I still have the first five dollar note that I made," said the gray-haired passenger.
"Good gracious!" exclaimed his traveling acquaintance, "how did you keep it so long?"
"Well, it was very imperfect, being my first, and I'd have had myself passing it."

PURITY ACCURACY

LONG TRIP FOR FOREST PATROL

LOS ANGELES, Cal., July 6.—So successful has the patrol by airplane of the national reserves in southern California proven to the government that the giant machine operating from March Field, near Riverside, has been assigned the task of making a daily circle tour covering approximately 400 miles. Under the new assignment the air scout zone has been extended greatly both to the north and to the south of the operating base.

Flying as far south as San Diego and reaching to the north as far as Santa Maria, the scout patrol keeps an ever watchful eye on the forests in the government domain. By means of wireless equipment any blaze on the hillside is located by its telltale smoke, reported to the nearest station by means of wireless telegraph and its career promptly ended by rangers who rush to the location in automobiles.

To make the service more effective a private landing stage has been constructed at Santa Barbara for the use of the patrol plane and a complete radio station has been installed there.

On its northbound trip the airplane covers the west end of the Angeles and all of the Santa Barbara national reserve. On its southward flight from March Field to San Diego the east end of the Angeles range and all of Cleveland Pass come under the gaze of the trained observers.

Since the adoption of the "bird's eye" method of detecting and reporting forest fires more than half dozen small menacing fires have been detected, their location flashed to the radio stations and their destructive patha effectively blocked.

OLD GAMBLING JOINT BEING REMODELED

MISSOULA, Mont., July 6.—More than 35 years ago and up to about ten years ago, all roads in western Montana led direct to the Gem theater, then in the heart of the most lurid of "red light" districts in the new country, on West Front street, Missoula. This spring is seeing here the final passing of this last remnant of those days. The theater building is being entirely remodelled and will be reconstructed to serve as a dairy. In the old days, "tired business men," lumberjacks, miners and stockmen there wooed the goddess of chance. Even as the workmen are engaged on the building today may be seen in letters whose paint is dimmed by time, across the walls of the structure:

"Who loves not wine, women and song, Remains a fool his whole life long."
"And, if that were true; old timers say, there were few fools in the good old days."
