FEEL NEED OF GRUMBLING

Complaints Absolutely a Source of Enjoyment to Great Mass of Human Beings.

One is as likely to grumble against the people one injures as against the people who injure one. One has to grumble at something or other. A man who can find nothing to complain about simply does not know how to enjoy himself, the New Statesman (London) observes.

Now wouldn't your life be exceedingly flat with nothing whatever to grumble at? That is why people like to read letters in the paper, and also helps to explain the huge circulation of one of the notorious weekly papers. The editor was clever enough to see that most people dearly love their grievances, and that if you give them a platform for their grievances you will sell more copies than if you give them only a platform for your own ideals.

We do not mean to say that the mass of human beings are devoid of ideals, but we fear that on ordinary occasions they are a great deal more interested in their complaints. It is just the same with regard to their health. They are much less likely to boast how well they are feeling than how ill they are feeling. A liver complaint means far more to a man than the best digestion. If you allow him he will describe his symptoms—the taste in his mouth, the sudden loss of vision, and what happens if he eats stewed plums. And he tells you all this not in humility but with the vanity of a peacock.

The vanity of an invalid far surpasses any vanity known in healthy men and women. This is, perhaps, one of the compensations of ill health. It gives one something to complain about.

FORESAW CONQUEST OF AIR

But Brother-in-Law of Oliver Cromwell Had Some Ideas That Appear Quite Today.

John Wilkins, who married Robina, sister of Oliver Cromwell, in 1656, had original ideas on flying. He set forth his theories in a book in which he discussed four possible varieties of aviation: By spirits or angels, by the help of fowls, by wings fastened immediately to the body, and by a flying chariot.

Wilkins wrote that the fourth way seemed to him "much more useful than the rest; and that is by a flying chariot, which may be so contrived as to carry a man within it; and though the strength of a spring might perhaps be serviceable for the motion of this engine, yet it were better to have it assisted by the labor of some intelligent mover. And, therefore, if it were made big enough to carry sundry persons together, then each of them in their several turn might successfully labor in the causing of this motion."

Wilkins was one of the founders of the Royal society. He believed it should be "easy to frame an instrument wherein anyone may sit and give such motion unto it as shall convey him aloft through the air."

The spines or thornes of the black thorn are not infrequently used in some parts of England as fish bones.

MADE HIS READING THOROUGH

Daniel Webster Seldom Satisfied With Only One Perusal of a Favorite Author.

Daniel Webster was one of the most earnest and intelligent of readers all his life long. His favorite authors were read and reread with a passionate fondness. His critical conversations upon the standard poets and essayists and orators of the English tongue are still remembered and quoted by those who were present to hear when the mood and opportunity of discourse were upon him. How he came to be so successful and intelligent a reader is explained in his autobiography. Whatever he read, he read so often and so earnestly that he learned to repeat it. "We had so few books," he says, "that to read them once or twice was nothing; we thought they were all to be got by heart." A small circulating library had been established in the neighborhood by his father and other persons, and among the books which he obtained from it was the "Spectator." "I could not understand why it was necessary that the author of the 'Spectator' should take such great pains to prove that Chevy Chase was a good story; that was the last thing I doubted." He tells us, "In those boyish days there were two things which I did dearly love, viz., reading and playing—passions which did not cease to struggle when boyhood was over." From "Books and Reading," by Noah Porter.

EGYPT'S BOOK OF THE DEAD

Contents Throw Interesting Light on the Morals of the People of That Ancient Period.

"Book of the Dead," more properly called the Book of the Manifestation of Light is the name of the most famous book of the ancient Egyptians, according to the Detroit News. It dates from the fourth dynasty, 3332 to 3556 B. C., and is written in Egyptian hieroglyphics. It contains prayers and exorcisms for the benefit of the soul on its long perilous journey in the lower world, as well as minute instructions by which it may vanquish the frightful monsters that will assail it before reaching the first gates of heaven.

The text of the "Book of the Dead," carefully revised and with illustrations, was published by M. Edouard Naville in 1886 translations also having appeared in several European languages. The following sentences from the book, in the soul's defense before Osiris, are interesting as throwing light on Egyptian morals: "I have not been intoxicated; I have not told secrets; I have not told falsehoods; I have not defrauded; I have not slandered; I have not caused tears; I have given food to the hungry, drink to the thirsty and clothes to the naked."

Brothers Only in Adversity.
Men have never felt themselves to be brothers in good fortune, in pride, in ambition in success, in the emotion born of conquest and of enjoyment of earthly blessings; but in the face of danger, in misfortune, in times of trial, Guglielmo Ferrero writes in the Atlantic.

Christianity could bid men to regard one another and to treat one another as brothers, because at the same time it told them that they were weak and imperfect creatures, needing to assist one another and always menaced by the enemy they held concealed within themselves. The nineteenth century, on the contrary told men that they were brothers, but told them at the same time that they were destined, one and all, to be monarchs of the universe.

And in order to be monarchs of the universe, men and nations, instead of embracing like brothers, threw themselves upon one another, arms in hand.

BIRD HIDES NEST CLEVERLY

South American Fiery Topaz Knows Well the Value of Matching Colors to Deceive Enemies.

Perhaps the most wonderful thing about the fiery topaz humming bird is the manner in which it makes its nest. In this respect it is a past master of camouflage for a very observant person or animal could be quite close to one of these nests and never be able to distinguish it from the bough or trunk of the tree to which it is attached. This nest is truly remarkable on account of its structure, and in appearance it greatly resembles leather, colored to represent the fungus and moss that grows upon the trees in the Amazon river region, where it makes its home. Still more interesting is the manner in which the nest is attached to the bark, as these birds weave it on in such a manner that it is difficult to see just where the bark or nest begins. The nest is composed of a kind of fungus which the birds gather and match their colors so well that camouflage effect is complete.

As might be guessed from the name, the fiery topaz is mostly a brilliant scarlet, which contrasts beautifully with the few black markings noticeable on the neck, as well as the green on the lower part of the back. There are no more harmonious colors than green and red, recognized everywhere as an outdoor combination that is hard to surpass, so one can imagine that the fiery topaz compares well with the birds of the South American jungles.

Although a member of the humming bird family, the fiery topaz is noted for the remarkably large size that it sometimes attains, as the entire length is often as great as eight inches.

DREAM OF AMPUTATED LIMBS

Feelings of Those Who Have Lost Arm or Leg Can Only Be Cured by Time.

Dr. Edred M. Corner, the famous London surgeon, has been studying the dreams of persons who have lost an arm or leg by amputation, and he reports some interesting observations to "The Practitioner." It is well known that after amputation the lost limb is still felt, at any rate for a time, and such sensations are called "phantom limbs." Dr. Corner says these are unusual among the young but frequent among the older, and they pass away with time, after eight months or a year the patient being unconscious of the lost limb except when he thinks about it. A man who has lost one limb may dream that he has lost both or that he has lost the wrong one, or that the one amputated is still there but seems awkward or hurts; the dreamer cannot bend the phantom leg or arm or find it stiff and heavy.

Radically fitting artificial limbs aggravate the sensations, evidently by irritating the severed nerves. Cold, damp, changes of weather and absence of occupation for the mind increase the sensations. The nearer the trunk the limb has been cut off the worse are the pains and the longer they are likely to continue.

Sometimes an operation or massage will cure a persistent case, but generally it has to be left to time.

Controlling Crows.

Various methods have been tried to keep crows away from poultry, most of which were ineffectual. One farmer tried five different methods. The first was a scarecrow, but this had little or no effect. In the second place corn, soaked in strychnine solution was scattered on a field of planted corn, but no dead ones were found. No corn was pulled and there was no appreciable decrease in the number of chickens taken. Third, a steel trap was set on a pole near the chicken yard, with one sole. Fourth, white twine was run on the stakes around and across the chicken yard; this kept the crows from the yard, but the young chicks would get out and would then fall a prey to the crows. Finally a cross was shot and hung on a pole near the chicken yard, after which there was no further trouble.

Human Body Needs Light.

Slum dwellers, who live in narrow and crowded streets, are pale and undersized. Improper nutrition has a good deal to do with it, but that is only one cause. All efforts to improve the condition of the poor in cities by giving them fresh air and cleaner quarters are in the direction of giving them more light.

Any physician will tell you that exercise in the open air is vastly more beneficial than any obtainable in a gymnasium. The chief reason why is that when you are playing tennis or golf, or riding a horse or a bicycle, or amusing yourself otherwise out of doors, you are getting the benefit of unlimited light.

X-Ray Seen to Humanity.

"It is through the infinitely little" Victor Hugo once wrote, "that the infinitely great reveals itself." That thought comes back with the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the X-ray, discovered during the spring and summer of 1895 by William Roentgen, a professor of physics. His achievement disclosed an emanation which could be used in physical investigations with searching power; it furnished a means by which "shadow" pictures could be taken of the interiors of opaque objects and proved of priceless value to surgeons by enabling them to locate obstructions and abnormalities in the human body.

SWEDEN AND FINLAND CLASH

STOCKHOLM, June 20. (By Mail.)

A critical situation has arisen between Sweden and Finland over Sweden's attitude toward a delegation from the Aland Islands which represented to the Swedish government that the population of the islands desired self-determination on the basis of a referendum. After a sharp exchange of notes between the two governments a battalion of Finnish troops has been landed on Aland and encamped near Mariehamn.

The Finnish government has arrested two leaders of the Aland deputation on a charge of high treason.

Sweden has despatched a note to Finland urging the Finnish government to consent to a plebiscite by which the population of the islands would decide whether they shall belong to Sweden or Finland but it is understood the Finnish government is unshaken in its determination to oppose any such measure.

Official opinion here is that Finland's attitude is based upon the assumption that the initiative for separation of the Aland from Finland was taken in Sweden, whereas, it is declared, the agitation began with Alanders who based their right of self-determination on historical grounds and upon principles recognized by the League of Nations.

The Finnish government has announced that it "absolutely rejects all such claims as are irreconcilable with her sovereignty over the Alands which Sweden recognized without reservation."

The Aland archipelago, in the Gulf of Bothnia, consists of 80 inhabited islands, with a population of 24,000 of whom 12,000 reside on Aland island, the principal town of which is Mariehamn. The island formerly belonged to Sweden but were taken by Russia in 1809. The Finnish government holds that the political importance of the islands is so great that no Finnish government could
