

COTTON PROMISES WELL, CALIFORNIA

TURLOCK, Cal., Aug. 3.—Growing of cotton is being tried out this summer in the Turlock irrigation district, central California. Two hundred and seventy-five acres have been planted.

Just outside the city a two-acre field that without any irrigation whatever, is making headway which gives promise of a good crop.

The plants are about 20 inches high now, and a dark, glossy green in color. At maturity they will stand at a height of about four feet.

The bolls are beginning to set and within a few weeks there will be a mass of white along with the green.

The crop was planted about the middle of April and is to be harvested about the first of September. Rows are four feet apart and plants about 18 inches apart.

A bale of cotton to the acre is considered a good yield, the standard bale weighing about 500 pounds, but it is the belief of those who know the cotton game that some of the more promising fields in this locality will turn a bale and a half.

The acreage is distributed among about 40 growers, the fields ranging from half an acre to as high as 45 acres.

The big acreage was put out by an experienced cotton man from Arizona who came here last fall.

The variety principally used here is that which is known as the American long staple, having a fibre length of about one and one quarter inches, and is used extensively in the manufacture of denims and second-grade fabric for automobile tires.

TAHOE NOT VOLCANIC

WASHINGTON, Aug. 3.—Lake Tahoe, in California, does not occupy the crater of an old volcano, government geologists assert in correcting the impression quite generally prevailing. The region about the lake, they say, shows evidence of volcanic activity of various kinds, but the lake itself lies in a structural depression—a dropped block of the earth's surface.

Prehistoric Lake Tahoe was larger and deeper than the present lake, according to the geological survey. Distant beaches that mark the former high levels of the lake stand about 100 feet above the present surface.

CONFERENCE OF WATER USERS ON AT SAN DIEGO

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Aug. 3.—Irrigation problems connected with the utilization of the waters of the Colorado river will be discussed at a conference to be held here, beginning today, at the call of Director Arthur P. Davis of the U. S. reclamation service.

There will be represented at this conference the Imperial Irrigation District, the American Legion, Coachella Valley District, the California-Mexico Land Company, West Side Imperial Irrigation Company, Yuma Water Users Association, Palo Verde Water Company, the City of Los Angeles, the City of San Diego, the All American Canal association of Los Angeles and the League of the Southwest which represents the states of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico and California.

Director Davis in the call for the conference specified the discussion shall turn upon the provinces of the Kinkaid Act. This bill was passed by congress and signed by the President last May. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and recommend plans to solve the irrigation and reclamation problems of the Imperial Valley and adjacent territory. The government has provided $20,000 for this investigation and other beneficiaries will provide $40,000 more. The investigation, of course, is conducted by the United States Reclamation Service and has already begun at Boulder Canyon, on the Colorado river just below the Grand Canyon.

If the plan Director Davis has in mind is accepted by congress when the report is made next December, Boulder canyon at the southern extremity of Nevada, north of Needles, and on the northeast boundary of Arizona will become the highest dam site in the world with a reservoir 40 miles long. The dam is to be between 450 and 500 feet high and will store 25,000,000 acres of water. It will generate between 450,000 and 500,000 horse-power of electrical energy. The power to be generated by this dam will be available for San Diego and will help tremendously in furnishing the energy to drive industries that may develop in and about San Diego.

One of the basic reasons for the investigation called for by the Kinkaid bill is to determine the feasibility of building the All-American Canal which has been under discussion for years in Imperial Valley. Director Davis has emphatically endorsed the plan. If the canal is built, between 400,000 and 500,000 acres of land in the Imperial Valley now arid will be reclaimed and will practically double the wealth of the valley.

SUES SHERIFF FOR $2000

George L. Humphrey, sheriff, is defendant in a suit filed yesterday by A. J. Hanan, who alleges that the sheriff wrongfully seized and levied upon his Dorris automobile, and as a result caused plaintiff to suffer loss and damage to an aggregate of $2000, the sum for which he sues.

The automobile was attached under a writ issued against Guy M. Ingram, who, plaintiff asserts had no title to the automobile levied upon.

The sheriff is protected by an indemnity bond filed by the plaintiff in the Ingram suit. He was acting under court instructions and his official conscience is resting easy.

COUNTY COURT ALLOWED TO SPEND $5000 ON BUILDING

Five thousand dollars, and not $500, is the amount excepted from the supreme court injunction against the use of the special courthouse fund on the Hot Springs courthouse building to cover necessary expenditures to protect the building.

This is according to the copy of the injunction on file in the circuit court here. The Herald printed a special dispatch from Salem when the order was entered, fixing the amount at $500, evidently an error in transmission of the message.

COUNTY FAIR LISTS ARE READY FOR DISTRIBUTION

The premium lists for the annual county fair, which will be held this year at the county farm, September 24 and 25, are nearly ready for distribution, stated Frank Sexton, secretary of the fair board, today. They will be mailed out within a few days, he said.

AT THE THEATERS

Enid Bennett has stopped being the disillusioned young wife and in "The Woman in the Suitcase" at the Star Theatre tonight is the devoted daughter of a father who isn't quite the ideal that she thinks he is.

It's not a woman that is tucked away in Paps Moreland's traveling bag, as you might imagine from the title, but the photograph of a designing member of the sex. The picture is decorated with some highly incriminating sentiments that convince Mary Moreland, played by Miss Bennett, that her dad is in the clutches of an unknown vampire called Dollie.

She doesn't sit down and cry, or even tell her mother about it, but starts out to "show up" the siren and demonstrate to her father the error of his course. Needing an escort, she secures a young adventurer, Billie Fluke, by inserting an ad in the papers. Between them they evolve a scheme that lands them in a very jazzy cabaret that apparently has forgotten that July 1st was anything but a date.

A bit of top-speed action follows, in which Billie beats up a boulder companion of Dollie's and Mary proves to Mr. Moreland that a good home is more to be desired than a heartless Cleopatra like Dollie.

The picture is an entertaining slice of life, with Enid Bennett at her best. William Conklin is convincing as the father and Dorcas Matthews makes an alluring "vamp." Roland Lee is the young man. Fred Nible directed the picture for Thomas H. Ince. It is a Paramount-Astcraft.

The story is one of the most fascinating in which Miss Bennett has been seen in many a day.
