

INDIAN IDEA OF RECKONING

Time Designated in Simple Fashion— Journeys and Distances Told Off by "Sleeps."

The American Indians of early days reckoned time by what they called "sleeps" and "moons." The Indian's "sleep" referred to a sun-to-sun day of 24 hours and his "moon" to what the white man roughly and improperly calls a month. The Indians indicated the noon hour by pointing vertically upward. To indicate the middle of the first half of the daylight period—9 o'clock—he pointed upward midway between the horizon and the zenith and to indicate mid-afternoon—3 o'clock—he pointed toward the opposite quarter. He spoke of the eastern horizon as "sunrise" and of the western horizon as "sunset."

Journeys and distances between different points were measured in "sleeps." Thus, when he undertook to tell how far he had traveled or to tell how far one point was from another, the old-time Indian would say a certain number of "sleeps." Ordinarily, a "sleep" in this sense corresponded to something like 35 miles—the distance a man could cover in a day, traveling at an ordinary pace on foot. However, it was not unusual for men carrying important messages to make twice 35 miles or more in a single 24-hour period.

New York Landmarks Going.

The "downtown" section of New York is losing one of its landmarks by the demolition of the Eastern hotel to make room for an office building. For nearly a hundred years it has been the favorite hostelry of American seafaring folk. "Dynamite Johnny" O'Brien, well known for his practice of shipping arms to the Latin-American countries, concocted many of his filibustering schemes in this hotel, which he made his headquarters.

One of the features of this building was its beams of solid mahogany. In 1822, when it was constructed, cargoes of supplies were frequently shipped from New York to South American ports, and when a return cargo could not be secured mahogany was brought back, serving the purpose of both cargo and ballast. These cargoes were sold cheaply, and were often used in the construction of New York buildings of that period.

A Heavy Exit.

I had had a misunderstanding with my employer, and when I handed in my resignation I told him in very plain English what I thought of him; he, also, pointing out a few faults he thought I had. A few months later, after answering a blind ad for a position, I received a reply naming a "Joe" for an appointment. My name at that time being an exceedingly common one, it was not recognized; neither did I recognize him, as he had moved his office and changed the firm name. Upon being ushered into the office I met my former employer face to face. We were both speechless, and I did not catch my breath until I had backed out and was in an elevator going down.—Chicago Tribune.

NOT GENERAL MANAGER

Through a bit of misinformation the Herald printed a statement in the issue of August 19 to the effect that Harold Gray had arrived from Medford to take over the management of the Mason-Ehrman company. It was learned today that he was not to succeed E. H. Jefferson, the present general manager, but is to be office manager of the local office.

ONE PLACE IN U. S. TERRITORY IS STILL WET

SAN JUAN, P. R., July 30. (By Mail).—Probably the only place under the American flag where prohibition is not now in force is in the Virgin Islands where, until congress enacts new laws, the old Danish laws remain in force.

The colonial council of St. Croix has just passed a bill repealing former local legislation for that island which provided for local prohibition until a specified period after the ending of the war. Similar legislation is pending in the colonial council for the islands of St. Thomas and St. John.

The treaty of sale by which the islands were transferred from Denmark to the United States provided that laws in force at the time of the transfer should remain in full force and effect until congress enacted special legislation for the islands. This has not yet been done. In the meantime the constitution of the United States, in all of its provisions, is not applicable to the islands and the eighteenth amendment has no meaning there.

As a war measure the colonial councils, the local law-making bodies, passed prohibition acts to be enforced during the war. As a result St. Thomas, where champagne sold for a dollar a bottle and other liquors were equally inexpensive, and the two other islands gradually became dry. Merchants in St. Thomas whose business is largely that of supplying ships stores have contended that prohibition was one of their greatest handicaps while the sugar makers in St. Croix were deprived of a lucrative trade in an important by-product of sugar when they were forced to cease making rum. With war prohibition removed by local legislation rum-making has already been resumed.

Indirectly, however, the Virgin Islands are feeling the force of the United States prohibition laws. Prohibition Director Donaldson has refused to permit the shipment of alcohol to St. Thomas from here to be used in the manufacture of bay rum unless manufacturers bind themselves to denature their product so that it cannot be used for beverage purposes. The manufacture of bay rum is one of the chief industries of St. Thomas and St. John.
