PURE LESSONS

We are slow to learn our lessons. Modern fire prevention is an open book, for all to read—yet the Klamath Falls holocaust proves that but little heed is taken.

A few weeks before there was the flaming tragedy of a Portland apartment house. These are warnings to this city and to Oregon that similar horrors are in the province of the future unless we apply the recognized knowledge of fire prevention, and rigorously enforce it by ordinance—by state law, if necessary.

There is talk of hardship to landlords, of alterations that are costly and bothersome. If without these alterations the structures are unsafe then they are unfit to house their patrons. There must be no official flinching from this decision. For it is also a hardship of no mean caliber to be incinerated, while paying the cost for shelter and safety, or to leave a burning hotel by leaping from an upper story window to the pavement.

The most dreadful price to pay for experience is that of human life. Unless we profit by that experience the price is certain to be required of us again.—Portland Oregonian.

The large amounts of cottonwood in southeastern Alaska if like the other species of cottonwoods, might be used to make excellent paper, in addition to the enormous resources of hemlock and spruce timber found in Alaska.
