A DAY WITH SENATOR HARDING

Calm, Steady, Determined, the American Who is Leading the Republican Party to Victory Goes About the Business of the Campaign in His Modest Office in Marion.

By WILLIAM HOSIER.
The American people will decide, of course. If they can visualize the vital principle which is at stake—the spirit which is at once the keynote and the mainspring of the campaign upon which the nation has entered, there can be no doubt of the result.

It isn't a thing that can be carried about the country, and exhibited from the rear end of a Pullman car. It is wholly apart from the red fire, blaring bands and stump oratory of old-fashioned campaigns. The issue, in short, goes deep down to that principle which has been the mainspring of the national life since the days of Lexington and Concord; and the patriotic citizen, Republican and Democrat alike, by taking counsel with himself, will find it imbedded in his own heart.

Here in Marion, O., you get a concrete exposition of that vital principle. It is good to come to Marion and get the true perspective. You are brought anew, here, to the realization that the country is in process of electing a chief executive to guide the destinies of 120,000,000 people for the four years ensuing from March 4 next; that the very serious business of bringing about what a European observer described as "a revolution by due process of law," is going forward with a proper regard for the dignity and importance of the task.

Scene Entirely Appropriate.

Your first impression is of the fitness of Marion as the scene for the enactment of such a chapter in American history. It is a quiet little country town, for all its boasted industrial activity; and when you approach the Harding residence, one among many in its simplicity and attractiveness, you feel it is quite in keeping with events that from this typical American home there should come a modest, dignified and capable, up-standing American upon whom the choice of his fellow citizens should fall to uphold the honor and traditions of the nation. This conviction grows when you meet the man. He is typical of the successful business man—of the hundreds of thousands of successful Americans who have accumulated a competence through the ordinary channels which are open to all hard working, straight-forward American boys.

Meet him, now. He has established an office in the home of George Christian, Jr., his secretary, which adjoins the Harding house—and this is typical; chief and secretary live side by side, each owning his own modest home. And by the way, these executive offices are illuminating as to the kind of a man it is whom the Republican party has made its standard bearer in this epoch-making campaign. Every room in the house is given over to the business in hand—the senator's conference room is the Christian dining room, his private office, where the important conferences are held, is the kitchen. In the living room sits Christian. Elsewhere, from cellar to garret, the staff are at work. No confusion, no disorder, no hectic shuffling at the top of one's voice, no ruing around in circles, pounding of the table, no harrying, jimmying or billying, with strident denunciations of the way the opposition candidate is to be beaten into a pulp. Just a thorough, careful, business-like transaction of the business in hand—precisely the way in which we like to think the work of 120,000,000 people will be conducted at the White House after March 4.

Step into the dining room and meet the senator. Just at the minute he is reading proof on editorials which are to be printed in his newspaper, the Marion "Star," in the afternoon. The senator stands for everything that is printed in the "Star," and is careful to read what goes into its columns before the paper goes to press. Disposing of the proof sheet, he shakes hands cordially with you, and you are at liberty to size him up.

Mark Him Dependable.

He is somewhat above the average, of course, because he has already been singled out by the people of Ohio to represent them in the senate. But aside from this: You are at once struck by his balance and his poise. You mark him as dependable—safe. There is that in his face, on his brow, which gives assurance that he is not the sort of a man who will speak without thinking, or act without deliberating. There is reserve force in his bearing, determination in his jaws, character in his mouth, kindly sympathy in his eyes.

As you listen to him talk here in the Christian dining room, or later, in a speech to a visiting delegation from the front porch of his home, this conviction is strengthened. He doesn't say anything in his office that he wouldn't say out on the porch, nor anything on the porch that he wouldn't adhere to in all sincerity in his office.

The thing that strikes you at all times—it is the very atmosphere of Marion—is his moderation, his restraint—the absence of all bombast and exaggeration in his statements, the careful presentation of the issues, the avoidance of all attempt to array one class against the other, the conveyance of the desire, if called to the presidency, to be president of all the people; and, without making any high-sounding promises, to give all of the people the best that is in him.

Avoids Personal Controversy.

Particularly noticeable is his avoidance of personal controversy. Not once since his nomination has Harding referred in a public speech to his opponent. He adheres to the issues. Not once has he permitted himself to indulge in personal denunciation of his rival.

He is sane. He has fixed convictions as to the moderation and balance which should characterize candidates for the high office of the presidency; departure from which he believes, without doing any good to the candidate who offends, does serve to bring American institutions into contempt.

During the war there was a harsh-kind of man in service as a gunner on an American merchantman. The time came when the ship was torpedoed; and the boat was put in charge of the tiller on the whaleboat in which a godly portion of the crew took refuge. A storm arose, and there was imminent danger that the boat would be swamped. In the stern sheets sat the boatman, rigid and erect, his hand locked to the tiller. He said little—"Steady!" now and then to the rowers; or "hold fast; take her head on!" as the boat rose on the crest of a giant wave, and then plunged straight down into the trough of the sea. But for twenty-three hours straight-away, he held fast to the tiller, and he didn't relinquish it until he had guided the boat hard and fast on a friendly beach.

Then he got up and stretched and asked for a pipe of tobacco. Calm, steady, determined and knowing his business, one conceives of the other Harding thus guiding the ship through any storm that may arise, to a safe harbor.

VOCATIONAL EXPERT COMING HERE NEXT WEEK

Mrs. Morris Ellis, vocational expert for ex-service men, will be in Klamath county all of this week. The American Legion post at its meeting last Tuesday night appointed a committee consisting of Arlie Worrell, Roy Fouch and Mr. Severance to act as a committee to arrange her work.

They have arranged to use the chamber of commerce rooms as her headquarters and any ex-service men wishing to consult her as to their probable life work can meet her there on Tuesday and Wednesday mornings or Friday afternoon, Saturday, Sunday and Monday. They are planning to send her to Merrill Wednesday afternoon and to Fort Klamath Thursday afternoon to confer with the men there.

Ex-service men in Merrill can consult her at the hotel of E. J. Lawrence Wednesday evening or Thursday morning; those at Fort Klamath at the Wise hotel on Thursday evening and Friday morning. Those in and around Klamath Falls can arrange a time to consult her by speaking to any of the local committee.

She will speak in the high school tomorrow afternoon, chamber of commerce Wednesday noon and at a special legion meeting tomorrow night.

Every ex-service man who has not settled on his life vocation will find help by consulting Mrs. Morris at any of these places. Her services are absolutely free. They have been greatly used and commended by 75 posts through Idaho and Oregon.
